While payment direct to the men by defendant would have little weight, being possibly a matter of convenient arrangement, it would indicate that defendant was solicitous that the men who drove their entry should be paid—an indication of supervision, although slight. The burden is upon the defendant to prove all the facts necessary to constitute Thompson an independent contractor. Kirkhart v. United Fuel Gas Co., 86 W. Va. 79, 102 S. E. 806. Payment "by the job," by the yard or by the ton, with power to employ and discharge employees in the performance of the work, is not alone sufficient to create the relation of an independent contractor, although it is a circumstance strongly indicative thereof. Kniceley v. Railroad Co., 64 W. Va. 278, 61 S. E. 811, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 370. If a coal mining company could create this relationship by "letting out contract work" in mining its coal, at a stipulated price per ton or bushel, it could avoid liability to the miners engaged in the work for injuries received by them. By contracting with a financially irresponsible independent contractor, payment for personal injuries might be totally defeated. We do not think the verbal contract with Thompson as set up in this case, taken together with the facts concerning the operation of defendant's coal mine, is sufficient to warrant us in holding, as a conclusion of law, that Thompson was an independent contractor. Hence, if Thompson, in charge of the work and representing defendant, hired the boy (which he denies) defendant is liable; or if Thompson permitted the boy to work in the mine (which is not disputed), the liability is not changed. The statute says:

"No child under the age of 16 years shall be employed, permitted or suffered to work in any mine, quarry, tunnel or excavation."

This inhibition applies to the owner of the mine, as well as to all other persons. It is his duty to see that no such child is employed or permitted to work in his mine. He cannot avoid this duty by attempting to shift it upon another. This defendant had control of its mine as a whole, and was operating it. The driving of the entry was a mere incident of the operation, a detail; and when it permitted, either advertently or inadvertently, this child to work therein, it became civilly responsible for injuries resulting to him therefrom. There is very persuasive evidence to show that defendant knew, or should have known, that the boy was driving the pony at night. He went the first night at the instance of some one, other than Thompson, to drive the pony. Blaine, who was sent by Baldwin on that mission, at that time saw the boy driving, and after making one trip with the pony, left the boy there for that purpose. Riffe, the assistant mine foreman, seemed to know something about it, for he discharged the boy, as he says, because he wanted or intended to "work on the rock." The boy brought the pony from defendant's barn, and hitched it to the mine car and drove into the mine. After discharging the boy at noon, Riffe again brought him back to do trapping in the afternoon, under what arrangement or understanding it does not appear. Riffe denies that he did so, but several witnesses make it certain that the boy came back and worked.

Error is assigned because plaintiff's instructions Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 do not incorporate therein the theory of contributory negligence on the part of the father in permitting, or acquiescing in, the employment of the boy in the mine. Defendant's instructions 8, 9, and 13 fully cover this theory. It is not necessary to insert in each instruction all the exceptions, limitations, conditions, and theories which are inserted in the instructions as a whole. The instructions must be taken and considered together. State v. Dodds, 54 W. Va. 289, 46 S. E. 228; Normile v. Traction Co., 57 W. Va. 132, 49 S. E. 1030, 68 L. R. A. 901.

From what we have said, it follows that defendant's instruction No. 1, directing a verdict for defendant; instruction No. 2, charging that the burden was on plaintiff of showing that the boy was employed by defendant at the time of his death; instruction No. 4, charging that if the boy had been discharged by defendant and employed by Thompson at the time of the injury the verdict should be for defendant; and No. 5, instructing that if the boy had been discharged and told not to go in the mine, but afterwards went to work with Thompson, hauling slate—then the relation of master and servant did not exist between the boy and defendant, and the verdict should be for defendant; were all properly refused.

We affirm the judgment.

Affirmed.

WENDELL v. PAYNE, Agent. (No. 4261.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 1, 1921. Rehearing Denied
Dec. 9, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Railroads \S 358(1), 359(1)—Ordinary care required as to trespasser or licensee.

A pedestrian using a railroad track for his convenience, unless at a public crossing, is a trespasser or licensee, and in the operation of its trains the railroad company owes to him only ordinary care in avoiding injury to him.

2. Railroads \S 400(8)—Negligence as to pedestrian seen on track held jury question.

Where such pedestrian is injured by a light locomotive going at a rate of 15 to 20 miles per hour on a slight up grade, and there is a substantial conflict in the evidence whether the injury could have been avoided by slowing down or stopping the locomotive after the injured person had been seen by the trainmen at a distance of 350 feet, the whistle sounded, and no heed given to the danger signal or approach of the locomotive by him, then it becomes a question for the jury to determine whether ordinary care has been used to prevent the injury.

3. Release \S 58(3)—Question whether release for personal injuries constituted accord and satisfaction held one for jury.

Where such pedestrian, being a deaf mute, is thus injured, and while in the hospital a short time thereafter is approached by a claim agent of the railroad company, and he then executes a release or acquittance for personal injuries, in consideration of payment of hospital services, without being able to read the release, and relies upon the representation of the claim agent that the paper signed is for the purpose only of making provision for payment of hospital charges, in order that he may remain in the hospital, it is error for the court to hold that such release will sustain a plea of accord and satisfaction; whether such release so obtained will sustain such plea is likewise a question for jury determination.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. Railroads \S 379—Duty to person seen stated.

After discovering a trespasser or licensee on the track, it is the duty of engineers to give timely warning, and, if there be no response to the warning, or anything indicating he has not heard, or suggesting that he is not in the use of his faculties and is making no effort to avoid danger, they must bring the train under control, if possible.

Error to Circuit Court, Mercer County.

Action by James Wendell against John Barton Payne, Agent, and from a judgment therein, the plaintiff brings error. Reversed, and judgment rendered for plaintiff on the demurrer to the evidence.

John R. Pendleton and A. M. Sutton, both of Princeton, for plaintiff in error.

Williams, Loyall & Tunstall, of Norfolk, Va., McNutt, Ellett & McNutt, of Princeton, and Hall, Wingfield & Apperson, of Roanoke, Va., for defendant in error.

LIVELY, J. After all the evidence had been introduced defendant demurred thereto, the jury found a conditional verdict of $6,250 in favor of plaintiff, the court sustained the demurrer, and entered judgment of nil capiat, and plaintiff brings error.

The action is for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff in March, 1919, while walking upon the track of defendant between the towns of Mullens and Corrinne, in Wyoming county, by being struck by a locomotive.

Plaintiff was a deaf mute, 64 years of age, a painter by trade, and was on his way up the track to Corrinne, where he was engaged in painting dwelling houses. The track seems to have been used generally by pedestrians; the county road running parallel thereto being out of repair at that time and for about one year prior thereto. He was alone, walking at a brisk pace between the rails when struck, at about 7:30 o'clock in the morning. Witness Saxton was also going to Corrinne, and was about 800 or 900 feet behind plaintiff, when the locomotive with tender attached (no cars) came from a Y track which connected with another track across the river (a small stream at that place) and onto the track on which plaintiff was walking. Saxton, perceiving the approach of the engine from the Y, ran to the intersection of the Y track with the main line, called the switch, and attempted to attract the attention of the man in the fireman's cab by motioning to him and then pointing ahead to plaintiff on the track, then 800 feet ahead, but was not sure that he attracted attention, stating that the man in the cab looked at him, the witness, and then looked up the track in the direction of plaintiff. The locomotive was going at about 25 miles per hour, according to this witness, and from 15 to 20 miles per hour according to those on the engine, the fireman, engineman, and an engine watchman who was "deadheading" to his work, and who was not a member of the engine crew. Witness Saxton testified that the engine proceeded to within about 350 feet of plaintiff when the whistle gave the danger signal of four or five short blasts in quick succession; that plaintiff paid no attention to the signal, being unable to hear, and proceeded as before and oblivious to the approach of the train, which did not decrease its speed. At the place where witness stood he could see the deaf man until the engine hit him, because the track curved slightly to the left with a slight up grade. He states that the engine did not slacken speed until a very short distance from plaintiff, when the brakes were applied, but too late. He hurried forward and arrived just as the unfortunate man was being picked up. This witness afterwards went upon the ground with an engineer in employ of defendant and pointed out and helped measure the distance from the switch where he was standing when he attempted to attract the attention of the man in the cab to the point where the danger signal was given, measured at 450 feet, and from that point to the place of accident, a distance of 350 feet, and a map of the track and surroundings is made a part of the record, showing these measurements and points. The man in the fireman's cab, McGuire, who was a watchman, "deadheading" to his work, states that he did not see Saxton at the switch, and of course did not see him motioning and pointing to the track ahead, but that after the engine had left the switch and had come to a curve of the track, a short distance therefrom, he saw plaintiff walking ahead between the rails, and, as soon as he "glimpsed" him, told the engineman that there was a man on the track. He first stated that the man was then about 400 or 500 feet ahead, afterwards about 350 feet, and afterwards four or five car lengths ahead, stating that railroad men usually estimate such distances by car lengths and not by feet, and explaining that cars varied in length from 47 to 50 feet. The engineman immediately blew the danger signals, and, he thought, checked the speed of the engine a little. The fireman then came from where he was shoveling coal into the engine, and told the engineman that there was a man on the track; and then, as he remembered, the engineman put on the emergency brake and stopped as soon as possible. The fireman, Long, stated that he was at the fire box putting in coal when he heard McGuire say there was a man on the track, and immediately stepped up on the engine where he could see ahead and saw a man, about 100 feet ahead, as he guessed, and then he, the witness, told the engineman "that would do (referring to sounding the whistle) he would hit the man," and then the engineman put on the brakes, but he was not sure that he reversed the engine. He said that when he looked out the window the man was about 100 feet ahead, and that the engineer stopped the engine as quickly as he could. The engineer, Stull, stated that he did not see the man until after he had been hit, could not see him on account of the curve, but as soon as the watchman told him a man was on the track he blew the whistle, and "eased the brake up a little," and then when the fireman, Long, looked out of the window and said, "I believe you will hit him," he put on the emergency brake, reversed the engine, and put on sand, but by that time he hit the man and saw him fall to the right side. He said it was only a few seconds after the watchman had told him that there was a man on the track that Long looked out of the window and said the man would be hit. He estimated that at that time he was from 90 to 100 feet away from the man, but would "hate to say" how far away he was; that he ran the engine about 50 or 60 feet past the place where the man was hit; that he could stop the engine in from 90 to 110 feet by the emergency and reversal of the engine when going at that speed, which the three men on the engine said was from 15 to 20 miles per hour. He gives no reason why he did not see the man when he came to the switch, when he was about 800 feet away. He was not asked that question, and possibly some obstruction was in the way to prevent. Both the watchman and the fireman knew plaintiff as a deaf mute, having frequently seen him at Mullens, but did not recognize him until he was hit by the engine. The engineman said he stopped his engine as quickly as possible after the fireman told him he would hit the man. Plaintiff stated that he had been on the track only a few minutes before he was hit, and sensed the approach of the engine just before it hit him, was surprised to see the engine near him and tried to get off, and had time to get off, "but train run faster when I tried to get off." Plaintiff's leg was broken above the ankle, two toes were mangled and were cut off by the surgeon, and the back of his head was severely cut. This latter wound was not of a permanent nature, but it appears that the injury to the leg is permanent, and plaintiff will always be a cripple. The witness Saxton stated that the engine could have been stopped two or three times in the distance from where the whistle was sounded to the place of the accident, basing his conclusion upon long observation of the starting and stopping of engines on the road and shifting cars on the yard. He had never worked on the railroad.

The defense is that the servants of the railroad company had discharged all the duties it owed to plaintiff, and under this evidence was not liable, and further that plaintiff had, by a writing sealed and witnessed, released all claim for damages in consideration of payment of the hospital and medical bills incurred by plaintiff. Plaintiff was first placed in the hospital at Mullens, and a short time thereafter removed to a hospital at Beckley, and the release was signed about two weeks after the injuries were received, while plaintiff was in the hospital. He remained there until in July, when he was discharged.

There are two controlling questions presented: (1) Did the train crew use reasonable care to avoid the accident? (2) Did plaintiff release the railroad company from his claim of damages? Either of these questions answered in the affirmative will sustain the lower court.

[1] First, we consider the evidence of the accident, and principles applicable thereto. A pedestrian, not an employee of a railroad company in the discharge of his duties, who uses the company's tracks for his convenience at any other place than at a public crossing, is a trespasser or a licensee, and cannot recover for injuries received by being struck by a locomotive unless the employees of the company operating the locomotive have failed to use reasonable care in the avoidance of injury to him after he is discovered. Kelley v. Railway Co., 58 W. Va. 218, 52 S. E. 520, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898; Blagg v. Railway Co., 83 W. Va. 449, 98 S. E. 528. While it was gross negligence of this plaintiff to walk upon a railroad track where trains were likely to pass, and especially so because he had been cautioned not to use them, yet it was still the duty of the servants of the company to use the ordinary care. His great carelessness will not excuse theirs, if they failed to exercise reasonable care after discovering him. His carelessness or infirmity does not change the rule of ordinary care on the part of the company, now well settled in this state.

[4] It is also well settled that, after discovering a trespasser or licensee on the track, it is the duty of those operating the locomotive to give warning of its approach in ample time, and if there be no response to the warning, or anything about the licensee's actions indicating that he has not heard, or anything unusual in his demeanor reasonably suggesting that he is not in use of his faculties, and that he is making no effort to avoid the approaching danger, then they must bring the train under control, if possible, and avoid the injury. It would serve no useful purpose to review our numerous cases announcing these principles. The eyewitnesses do not wholly agree upon these facts, as will be noted from the summary of their evidence hereinbefore set out; and the pertinent inquiry is whether those in control of the engine exercised ordinary care to prevent the injury.

[2] What is the "ordinary care" to be used by the trainmen in cases of this character. It is said to be "such care as a prudent man of requisite skill will take under the circumstances of a particular case." But who is to decide that, under particular circumstances and conflicting testimony, ordinary care has been exercised? Where there is no conflict of testimony, buttressed by the physical facts, it may be proper for the court to determine the question; but such care is not to be laid down by a fixed rule and is not always easy to measure and ascertain, but, from its variable nature, depends upon the varying circumstances peculiar to each particular case, and it cannot always be determined as a matter of law. Especially is this true where there is a conflict of evidence in the decision of which men might reasonably differ. Hence the peculiar propriety of not withdrawing questions of this character from the jury. Is there a substantial conflict as to the reasonable care exercised in this case? Saxton says defendant was easily discernible from the switch, where he stood, at a distance of 800 feet, but does not know if the men on the engine could have seen him. He says, however, that when the whistle sounded the alarm the engine was 350 feet from defendant, who plainly indicated that he was paying no heed to the approach of the engine, that the speed did not slacken, and that the engine could have been stopped two or three times before it reached the deaf mute. The witness McGuire partially corroborates Saxton as to distance when the whistle first sounded. The engineman and fireman state they were much nearer when he was discovered. The fireman says they were about 100 feet away when he saw the man and told the engineer they were going to hit him. The engineer says he could stop within 90 to 120 feet; but, after the fireman told him he would hit the man, he actually went from 50 to 60 feet beyond the place the engine struck him, making a distance the engine ran of 150 or 160 feet before it was stopped, after the fireman had so warned him. While the watchman was a "deadhead," and his negligence in not discovering plaintiff and giving the warning sooner cannot bind the company, as he had no duty to perform, under our holding in Bess v. Railway, 35 W. Va. 492, 14 S. E. 234, 29 Am. St. Rep. 820, yet he did notify the engineer that there was a man on the track, while they were yet 350 feet away, and as the engineer could not see because of the curve and boiler head, and had no responsible person to see for him, the fireman then being engaged at the firebox, it was his duty to bring his engine under control. He could not see if the man was apparently in possession of his ordinary faculties and was aware of the approach of the engine. The engineer was proceeding blindly—that is, without being able to see the track ahead—and this fact called for caution. He was permitting this irresponsible passenger or "deadhead" to see for him. He says he "eased the brakes a little," but Saxton says there was no diminution in the speed. Under this evidence, can we say there is no substantial conflict? Had an unconditional verdict been rendered on this evidence in favor of plaintiff would it have been set aside as contrary to the evidence? Is not here a serious question of the exercise of "ordinary care" which should have been submitted to the jury? The principles governing here are tersely stated in Raines v. Railway Co., 39 W. Va. 50, 19 S. E. 565, 24 L. R. A. 226, where it is said:

"When a given state of facts is such that reasonable men may differ upon the question whether there was negligence or not, the determination of the matter is for the jury. But when the facts are such that all reasonable men must draw from them the same conclusion—when there is no room for two reasonable opinions about it—then it becomes a question of law for the court."

The facts here place this case in a different class from those of Huff v. Railway Co., 48 W. Va. 45, 35 S. E. 866, Blagg v. Railway Co., 83 W. Va. 449, 98 S. E. 526, and other similar cases cited by counsel for both plaintiff and defendants. In the Huff Case plaintiff was using the tracks in the yard as a footway at night, and stepped out of the way of a passing freight train onto a track leading into the roundhouse where he was struck by a yard engine backing into the roundhouse. He was not seen by the engine crew, no headlight was on the tender, and consequently no warning given. In the Blagg Case there was no evidence of when deceased came upon the track, whether he was seen by the trainmen before he was hit or what effort was made, if any, to avoid the injury, no evidence whatever to show whether the engineer, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have avoided the injury after discovering the deceased on the track. In the Robertson Case, 104 S. E. 615, the deceased was walking on the track and was killed by a backing train on the rear of which there was no watchman at the time of the injury, and consequently he was not discovered, and no one knew the exact details of the immediate accident, a case similar in principle to the Blagg Case. In the Bralley Case, 66 W. Va. 462, 66 S. E. 653, the deceased was on the track and drunk, and there was evidence tending to prove that he came on the track and was seen by the fireman in ample time to have given the engineer warning of the danger. The fireman testified that the man staggered suddenly upon the track about 200 feet ahead of the engine, and that he then gave warning but too late to avoid the injury. The engineer stated that he immediately applied the brakes and did all in his power to stop after seeing the man. Other evidence was to the effect that deceased was staggering from side to side and plainly indicated his drunkenness, and hence that ordinary care was not exercised. This court held that under such evidence the motion to exclude and the instruction to find for defendant were properly overruled, and the questions presented were properly jury questions, but reversed because of an erroneous instruction.

We are of the opinion that the evidence in the case now under consideration is of such conflict that the ordinary care required on the part of the engineman and fireman to avoid injury to plaintiff cannot be presumed to have been exercised as a conclusion of law and that it was a question for jury determination.

[3] We now come to the release of damages. Plaintiff was in bed in the hospital at Beckley, where the claim agent came to see him on the 19th of March, 1919, 15 days after the accident, and the attending surgeon introduced the claim agent as such to plaintiff. The conversation carried on relative to the "company release" was by writing, the only way by which the deaf mute could communicate except by the use of signs. The notes of this transaction in writing were preserved by the claim agent and are in evidence, and it may be well to here incorporate the claim agent's testimony:

"When I first went there, Dr. Coleman took me up and introduced me with this, he says: 'Mr. Counts wants to talk to you. He is claim agent for the Virginian Railroad.' Then I told him: 'I have been to the place you were hurt. Am sorry to find you this way. How did it happen, anyway.' I don't think he made any reply to that only the motions of his hands, and I said, 'Train came around curve on you before you knew it?' and he said 'Yes,' and I said, 'How old are you?' and he said 'Sixty-two.' Then I said, 'Where were you going that morning?' 'I was contracting for Corrinne Company. Twenty houses to paint. I had three men for me.' I said, 'We will take the best care of you we can and pay your bill here,' and at that time I went down stairs, left him just for a minute, and went downstairs to Dr. Coleman's office, and I said, 'I will be back in a few minutes,' and I went down stairs and came back, and I asked him, 'Where do you live, and have you any relatives?' and he said, 'I was raised in Philadelphia, Pa., and left home for Florida in 1896; didn't hear from them; I left Florida three years ago and come to Mullens,' and I said 'Well, you stay here until you get well; we will take care of you the best we can.' He said, 'Dr. Logan cut two toes off Mullens Hospital five days.' I said, 'We will take care of your medical bill as long as you need any attention, and I want you to sign release for it, so our company will pay it for you,' and he said, 'I am going—I don't know just what's out there; I can't read it—and I said to him, 'You must stay in the hospital until you get well; will you sign the release now?' and he said, 'Yes; I will stay until I get well,' and I said, 'We have a piece of paper, company release, to be signed; do you want to sign it now?' and he said, 'Yes,' and I said, 'I have this paper for you to sign; then I told Dr. Coleman and Logan to take good care of you and we would pay them,' and he says, 'I have been walking from Mullens to Bud, Itman, and all to Maben and all on Gulf; I always watch,' and he asked me, 'Do you live at Elmore?' and I said, 'No; at Princeton,' and I asked him, 'Where do you stay at Mullens?' and he said, 'Mr. A. Smiley, White Kitchen.'"

Plaintiff says he did not read the printed part of the paper because he did not have his spectacles and could not read the fine print. He could only read and did only read the part written in by the claim agent. He says that he signed it in order to be permitted to stay in the hospital. That was all that was talked about, and, when we refer to the written statements above set out, we find that nothing was said about the release of damages for the injury; they refer to payment of the medical bill. The claim agent's evidence on that point is:

"I said, 'We will take care of your medical bill as long as you need any attention, and I want you to sign a release for it, so our company will pay it for you.'"

Nowhere is there any mention made of a release for damages. No suggestion of that character in the conversation leading up to the signing of the release. The agent presumed that plaintiff read the release before signing, as he had it long enough for that purpose. The injured man was 64 years old and without his spectacles, and states that he did not and could not read the printed portion, and signed in reliance upon the agent's statement of the purpose of the execution of the paper. The release has no more force or solemnity than any other contract in writing; and whether the minds of the contracting parties met under these circumstances is a question for the jury. The presumption is that plaintiff read the release and knew its contents when he signed. This presumption can be rebutted. Whether the facts here are sufficient to do so, we need not say. The evidence is very persuasive that the old man did not know what was in the release, and relied upon the information given him by the claim agent as to its contents. His future actions bear this out. We do not say that the agent fraudulently obtained his signature. The agent may have been under the impression that plaintiff read and fully understood the contents. We do say, however, that, under all these circumstances, the introduction of the agent as such by the surgeon, the writings concerning the medical bills, the interest of the parties, the pain and mental anxiety of the signer, his infirmity of hearing and speech, his age, and deprivation of spectacles, a jury question clearly arose, and the demurrer to this evidence should have been overruled. Norvell v. Railway Co., 87 W. Va. 467, 68 S. E. 288, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 325.

Both of the controlling questions here presented, namely, that of the use of ordinary care by the servants of defendant to prevent injury to plaintiff, and that of the validity of the release, we conclude, should have gone to the jury.

We therefore reverse the judgment, and render judgment for the plaintiff on the demurrer to the evidence.

Reversed, and judgment here.

(89 W. Va. 615)

ALLEN v. BURDETT et al.
(No. 4253.)(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 22, 1921.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Limitation of actions §55(4)—Malicious prosecution suit must be begun within one year after judgment for defendant.

The right to sue for malicious prosecution of a civil action accrues upon the rendition in the trial court of a judgment for the defendant in the action complained of, and is barred by the statute of limitations if not asserted within one year after such judgment, although the plaintiff in the suit which it is claimed was maliciously prosecuted may have a right to apply for an appeal or a rehearing, of which he does not avail himself.

2. Limitation of actions §130(10)—Suit, begun and dismissed for failure to file declaration will not save from bar of limitation of statute.

A suit, begun by the issuance and service of process, and dismissed at rules for the failure of the plaintiff to file his declaration, will not save a second suit for the same cause of action, brought within one year after such dismissal, from the bar of the statute of limitations.

Error to Circuit Court, Kanawha County.

Action by P. B. Allen against Charles D. Burdette and others. Judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Morgan Owen, of Charleston, for plaintiff in error.

Byrne, Littlepage & Linn, S. B. Avis, Ivory C. Jordan and Price, Smith, Spilman & Clay, all of Charleston, for defendants in error.

RITZ, P. In this suit for malicious prosecution, or what is sometimes called a malicious abuse of civil process, the defendants interposed a plea of the statute of limitations of one year, to which plea plaintiff tendered a special replication in writing, which the lower court held was insufficient, and, the plaintiff making no other reply to the plea filed, judgment was rendered for the defendants, and this writ of error is prosecuted to review the same.

According to the allegations of the declaration, on the 24th of February, 1917, defendants instituted an involuntary proceeding in bankruptcy against the plaintiff in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of West Virginia, to which petition the plaintiff filed a demurrer, which being overruled on the 12th of December, 1917, the cause was referred to a special master to ascertain and report upon the facts set up in said petition. The special master took the testimony and reported to the court that the plaintiff had not committed the acts of bankruptcy charged in said petition, and on the 1st day of October, 1918, the report of the special master was confirmed, and the said plaintiff adjudged not to be a bankrupt. This action was brought on the 17th of December, 1919, seeking to recover damages sustained by him by reason of that bankruptcy proceeding prosecuted against him. The defendants filed a plea of the statute of limitations, in which they aver that the plaintiff's cause of action did not accrue within one year before the commencement of this suit. Plaintiff demurred to this plea of the statute of limitations, which demurrer being overruled, he filed a special replication thereto, in which he averred that on the 15th day of October, 1918, he brought an action against the defendants in this suit upon the same cause of action herein set up, returnable to November rules, 1918; that a few days after the issuance of the summons in said cause he sought to secure the papers in the bankruptcy case for the purpose of preparing his declaration; that upon making application for said papers he was informed that they were in the hands of the attorney for the petitioners in the bankruptcy proceeding; that plaintiff, through his counsel, then called on said attorney and inquired if petitioners in the bankruptcy suit intended to prosecute an appeal from the judgment of the District Court, and was informed that they had not then decided what they would do; that knowing that it was necessary to aver in his declaration that the proceeding upon which the malicious prosecution suit was based was finally determined, and realizing that petitioners had until the 19th of November, 1918, in which to file a petition for rehearing in said bankruptcy proceeding, which would suspend the order entered therein on the 1st of October until disposition was made of the petition for rehearing, he, plaintiff's counsel, believed that the suit brought by him on the 15th of October was premature, and for that reason did not file a declaration therein; that this conclusion was arrived at after diligent examination of the authorities and consultation with other reputable attorneys in regard to the right of the petitioners in the bankruptcy proceeding to appeal or file a petition for rehearing, and the time within which the same could be filed; that, coming to this conclusion, he did not file his declaration in said suit brought on the 15th of October, but allowed the same to be dismissed at February rules, 1919, for failure to file such declaration, and that this suit for the same cause of action was instituted within one year from the dismissal of said first suit at February rules, 1919; that by reason of the institution of said first suit and its dismissal at rules for failure to file the declaration as aforesaid, plaintiff, by virtue of section 19 of chapter 104 of the Code (sec. 4432), might maintain this suit brought within one year after the dismissal of such first suit. Defendants demurred to this replication, and the court sustained their demurrer. The plaintiff declined to make any other replication to the plea of the statute of limitations, and the court rendered judgment in favor of the defendants thereon.

The plaintiff on this hearing insists that he is entitled to maintain this suit for two reasons: First, that having brought a suit which was dismissed within one year before the bringing of the present suit, the bar of the statute of limitations does not apply by reason of the provisions of section 19 of chapter 104 of the Code; and, second, that, inasmuch as petitioners in the bankruptcy proceeding had a right to appeal from the judgment of the District Court holding that the plaintiff was not a bankrupt, or to file a petition to rehear that judgment, his right to institute his suit for malicious prosecution did not accrue to him until the expiration of the time within which an appeal might be taken or a petition to rehear filed, which was less than one year prior to the institution of the present suit.

[1] When does the right to institute suit for a malicious prosecution accrue? If it accrues upon the rendition of a final judgment by the court in which the alleged malicious prosecution was conducted, then the statute begins to run from the entry of such final judgment. If, however, it does not accrue until the right to appeal or to apply for a rehearing of such final judgment is barred, then, of course, the statute of limitations would not begin to run until the expiration of the time fixed by law for taking an appeal, or presenting a petition for rehearing. That there must be a determination of the suit which it is alleged is maliciously prosecuted is uniformly held, and the plaintiff here contends that there is no such final determination of that proceeding until the right to appeal is barred, as well as the right to file a petition to review or rehear; and especially is this true, according to his contention, where the plaintiff in the suit alleged to be maliciously prosecuted may appeal as matter of right from the judgment therein. Under our authorities a proceeding to review a final judgment by appeal or writ of error is treated as a new suit, and not as a continuation of a suit in which the judgment or decree appealed from was rendered. Plaintiff insists, however, that this doctrine does not apply in proceedings in bankruptcy; that an appeal in such a proceeding is a continuation of the former proceeding, and that that proceeding is not concluded until the determination of such appeal, if the same be taken, or until the right to take the same is barred. We do not think the determination of this question is of any importance in this case. Whether appellate process be treated as a new suit or simply a continuation of the old suit can make little difference, unless such appellate process has in fact been taken advantage of by the party adversely affected by the judgment or decree. When the court in which the suit alleged to be maliciously prosecuted is pending has complete jurisdiction and renders a judgment finally disposing of the matters, that judgment is final and conclusive upon the parties to the suit until it is gotten rid of by some appropriate process, and certainly, so long as it stands without any proceeding being taken to review it, it constitutes a termination of the suit in which it is rendered. There may be some question as to the right to maintain a malicious prosecution suit in a case where appellate process has actually been taken advantage of, and where an appeal or writ of error is pending in a superior court. Upon this question we find the authorities very much divided. Many courts hold that, even though an appeal or writ of error is being prosecuted, and is pending, a suit for malicious prosecution may be instituted and prosecuted, and the judgment of the court in which the alleged malicious prosecution was conducted will be considered a final determination of the questions involved until it has actually been reversed or set aside by a competent tribunal. There are other courts which hold that in such case the proper procedure is to stay the trial of the suit for malicious prosecution until the determination of the writ of error or appeal in the appellate court, while still others hold that where an appeal or writ of error is actually pending and being prosecuted in an appellate court, no suit for malicious prosecution may be maintained until such appeal or writ of error has been actually determined favorably to the party seeking to bring the malicious prosecution suit.

We find no authorities, however, which hold that simply because the plaintiff in a suit which it is alleged was maliciously prosecuted may have a right to prosecute an appeal from a judgment adverse to him, the party claiming to be injured by such malicious prosecution may not maintain a suit to recover the damages sustained by him thereby until such right is barred by lapse of time. The following authorities indicate the views of the courts upon this question: 18 R. C. L., title, Malicious Prosecution, § 14; Levering v. National Bank of Morrow County, 87 Ohio St. 117, 100 N. E. 322, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 611, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 917, and note; Luby v. Bennett, 111 Wis. 613, 87 N. W. 804, 56 L. R. A. 261, 87 Am. St. Rep. 897; Graves v. Scott, 104 Va. 372, 51 S. E. 821, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 927, and note, 113 Am. St. Rep. 1043, 7 Ann. Cas. 480; McCormick Harvesting Machine Co. v. William, 63 Neb. 391, 88 N. W.

497, 56 L. R. A. 338, 93 Am. St. Rep. 449, and note at page 470; Foster v. Denison, 19 R. I. 351, 36 Atl. 93; Marks v. Townsend, 97 N. Y. 590; Carter v. Paige, 80 Cal. 390, 22 Pac. 188. There is no dissent among these authorities from the view that the right to bring such a suit for malicious prosecution accrues upon the rendition of a final judgment by the court in which the suit complained of is tried, notwithstanding there may be a right of appeal not exercised. Nor do we see any good reason for a different holding. Upon the rendition of a final judgment in a case the suit is just as much terminated before the time expires within which an appeal may be taken as it is afterward, provided no appeal is ever in fact taken therefrom.

What effect the actual pendency of an appeal may have upon the right to maintain a suit for malicious prosecution we need not determine in this case, for the question does not arise. There is no averment that an appeal was ever taken, or any other means used by the defendants here to secure a reversal of the judgment of the District Court in the bankruptcy case. It may be that if the defendants in this suit had actually prosecuted an appeal or filed a petition to rehear the judgment rendered by the bankruptcy court, the right to institute and prosecute a suit for malicious prosecution would not accrue until the determination of the questions arising upon such appeal, or petition to rehear; or it may be, as has been held by some other courts, that in such case the right to institute the suit exists, but the prosecution of it would be suspended until after the determination of the questions arising upon the proceeding taken to reverse the judgment. We express no opinion as to the correct holding upon this question. We only find that where a judgment has been rendered by a court in which a suit has been instituted which finally disposes of that suit adversely to the plaintiff, the defendant may maintain a suit for the malicious prosecution of such suit without waiting for the time to expire within which appellate proceedings may be instituted, and, this being true, of course, it follows that the statute of limitations begins to run against him from the entry of the judgment finally disposing of the suit alleged to be maliciously prosecuted by the court in which it was tried.

[2] But is the plaintiff in this case entitled to the benefit of section 19 of chapter 104 of the Code? He claims that because he instituted a suit within the statutory period, but allowed the same to be dismissed for his failure to file a declaration for the reason that he considered it prematurely brought, he is entitled to maintain this suit, brought within one year from the dismissal of his first suit for the same cause of action. This statute has been construed by this court in several cases, and our uniform holding has been that it has no application to a case in which the plaintiff voluntarily abandons his first suit. Lawrence v. Winifrede Coal Co., 48 W. Va. 139, 35 S. E. 925; Tompkins v. Ins. Co., 53 W. Va. 479-484, 44 S. E. 439, 62 L. R. A. 489, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1006; Hevener v. Hannah, 59 W. Va. 476, 53 S. E. 635; Ryan v. Piney Coal & Coke Co., 69 W. Va. 692, 73 S. E. 330; Bent v. Read, 82 W. Va. 880, 97 S. E. 286. The plaintiff in this case admits the force of the decisions above cited, but says that he should be given the benefit of the statute, for the reason that he abandoned his first suit in good faith, believing that he did not have a right to institute it at the time he did. Our decisions all hold that section 19 of chapter 104 of the Code will have the effect of tolling the statute of limitations only when the plaintiff has been forced by the court in which his first suit was pending to dismiss it or abandon it because of lack of jurisdiction in the court, or for some other reason. He cannot substitute his own judgment for that of the court in which the suit is pending, and claim the benefit of the statute upon a voluntary abandonment or dismissal of his suit. Such a holding would in effect give a plaintiff the right to keep a cause of action alive forever simply by bringing successive suits, each within one year from the time he dismissed the last preceding one. The construction placed upon this statute by this court has been concurred in by the legislative authorities for many years, and we are warranted in the belief that, if it was not in accord with the legislative intent, it would not have been allowed to stand unquestioned, and without some attempt being made to declare a different legislative intent.

Our conclusion is that the plaintiff's special replication made no defense to the plea of the statute of limitations relied upon, and the judgment of the circuit court so holding is affirmed.

HANLY et al. v. HARMISON. (No. 4295.)(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 22, 1921.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. Reformation of Instruments ¶45(1)—Relief granted only where evidence of mutual mistake is clear, positive, and direct.

Reformation of a written instrument because of a mutual mistake is one of the well-recognized grounds of equity jurisdiction, but such relief will only be granted when the evidence offered to establish the mistake is clear, positive, and direct, and so preponderates as to convince that there is error in the contract sought to be reformed.

2. Reformation of Instruments ¶45(2)—Reformation granted where supported by direct, positive testimony and parties' contemporaneous construction.

Where the evidence offered in support of a bill to reform a contract consists of direct, positive, and unequivocal statements of two of the parties who conducted the preliminary negotiations, as to what the agreements arrived at were, which are supported by receipts given by the other party showing a contemporaneous construction by all of the parties to the contract in accordance with the evidence offered in support of the bill to reform it, relief will be granted, notwithstanding the other party to the negotiations testifies that the contract as executed contains the agreement arrived at, but on cross-examination states, when his attention is directed to the negotiations in regard to the particular matter in respect to which reformation is sought, that he does not recollect whether there was any agreement in regard thereto or not. Such an equivocal denial of the positive testimony of the other parties, supported by the contemporary construction of the contract by the parties, will not be effective to defeat reformation.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hampshire County.

Suit by W. W. Hanly and others against Frank L. Harmison. Decree in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, temporary injunction reinstated and perpetuated, decree for the plaintiffs, and cause remanded for execution of part of decree if necessary.

G. W. McCauley, of Moorefield, and Geo. E. Price, of Charleston, for appellants.

J. Sloan Kuykendall, of Romney, for appellee.

RITZ, P. In this suit to enjoin an action of unlawful entry and detainer, and to have reformation of a contract of lease, and relief from an alleged forfeiture thereunder, the circuit court denied the plaintiffs any relief, dissolved the temporary injunction granted them, and dismissed their bill, and this appeal is prosecuted to review that decree.

The plaintiffs W. W. Hanly and John C. Shoupe, together with one George R. Wheeler, entered into a contract of lease with the defendant, dated the 14th of August, 1907, by the terms of which Harmison leased to them a small tract of about one-half acre of land situate on the South Branch of the Potomac river together with the right to hunt and fish on the farm of the defendant, as well as some other rights not material to be considered in connection with the controversy here involved. The purpose of the plaintiffs and their associates in leasing the land was to secure a place upon which they might erect a bungalow or cottage for the purpose of retiring thereto during the summer months. The term provided for in the lease was 10 years, with the privilege of renewing it for an additional 10 years. It is further provided that the lessees shall pay the lessor an annual rental of $25 on or before the 1st of September in each year. It is also stipulated that the lessees shall purchase provisions and produce from the lessor, and use his services in hauling from the railroad to the cottage when such provisions and produce are supplied, and such services rendered upon reasonable terms. Immediately after the execution of the lease the lessees began the erection of a cottage or bungalow upon the premises, and completed it in a very short time. They claim that the amount expended by them in the erection of this cottage, and in improving the premises was some $500 or $600, but that it would cost a very much larger sum at the time the testimony was taken, because of the increased cost of labor and material. The three lessees, at the time of making the lease, were associated in business together at Cumberland, Md. Some time thereafter Wheeler severed his connection with his associates and moved to the West, at which time he assigned all of his interest in the lease to the plaintiffs Hanly and Shoupe. The lessees have occupied the premises ever since the construction of the cottage thereon. The rentals, it seems, were regularly paid. Harmison makes some complaint that during the continuance of the lease the plaintiffs did not purchase their produce and supplies from him, and did not permit him to do their hauling. They admit that such was the case, but say that the reason they purchased their supplies elsewhere and procured their hauling to be done by others was that they could secure the supplies very much cheaper from other sources, and procure their hauling to be done in a very much more satisfactory manner, and for less money, by others. Complaint is also made by Harmison that the plaintiffs permitted hunting and fishing to be done on Sunday on his premises, and indulged in the immoderate use of alcoholic liquors. These charges are denied by the plaintiffs. They are not material to the determination of the controversy now before us, and are introduced in the record evidently for the purpose of furnishing a basis for the strained relations which existed between the parties during the latter years of the lease.

About the 19th of August, 1917, the defendant Harmison gave notice to the plaintiffs that the lease under which they were holding the premises had expired on the 14th of that month, and requiring them to at once vacate. They declined to do so, but insisted that they were entitled to keep the property for 10 additional years under the renewal provision, and insisted that their original contract did not expire until the 1st of September of that year, instead of the 14th of August, and demanded a renewal of the lease for an additional 10 years. Some correspondence passed between the parties without result, when the defendant Harmison instituted an action of unlawful entry and detainer against the plaintiffs in this suit. This bill was thereupon filed, in which the plaintiffs allege that there was a mutual mistake in the original lease, in this, that the agreement of the parties was that the term should commence on the 1st of September, 1907, and continue for 10 years, making it expire with the 31st of August, 1917; while the language of the lease is that it is for a term of 10 years from the date thereof, said date being the 14th of August; and averring that during the whole period all of the parties had treated the term as beginning on said 1st day of September, and had treated the annual rental period as extending from September 1st to September 1st; and praying that the plaintiff in the unlawful entry and detainer suit be enjoined from further prosecuting the same; that the lease be reformed so as to make the term therein provided begin on the 1st day of September, 1907, and the said Harmison be required to execute a renewal of said lease for an additional term of 10 years from the 1st of September, 1917; or, if the evidence should turn out to be insufficient to justify relief by reformation, that the plaintiffs be relieved from the forfeiture of their right of renewal for an additional 10 years by reason of their failure to demand such renewal before the expiration of the original term, on the ground that such failure was due to inadvertence and mistake, and that Harmison well knew for some time that they desired and would demand a renewal, and would not in any wise be injured thereby, while the plaintiffs, if they were denied the renewal, would lose the property which they had upon the premises without receiving the benefits which all of the parties expected they would receive therefrom at the time the contract was entered into. The court below granted a temporary injunction by which Harmison was restrained from prosecuting the unlawful entry and detainer suit. In answer to the bill he denied that there was any mistake in the contract, but asserted that it expresses the true understanding of the parties, and denied the right of the plaintiffs to have a renewal of the lease for an additional 10 years. Evidence was taken by both parties, and upon a hearing the circuit court found that the plaintiffs were not entitled to relief upon either of the grounds set up in their bill, dissolved the temporary injunction granted, and dismissed the suit.

Should the court have reformed this contract upon the evidence offered for that purpose? It appears from this evidence that the parties who negotiated the contract were Shoupe and Wheeler on the one hand and Harmison on the other; Hanly not being present at the time. Wheeler and Shoupe both testify that negotiations were conducted some time in the month of August, and that they resulted in an agreement for the lease upon the terms expressed therein, except that it was definitely and positively agreed and understood that the rental period should begin on the 1st of September, 1907, which was only a few days after the negotiations. There is no equivocation or doubt in their testimony about this being the understanding as between them and Harmison. Wheeler says that he then wrote the contract when he returned to his home at Cumberland, Md., and by inadvertence omitted to state therein that the term should begin on September 1, 1907, and that he never noticed this omission until the controversy arose. In addition to this oral testimony there is introduced in evidence two receipts from Harmison for the rental for 2 years, which it is argued show an understanding of the contract by all of the parties consistent only with the contention of the plaintiffs. One of these receipts is for the sum of $25, and recites in it that it is for ground rent from September 1, 1911, to September 1, 1912, as per agreement. The other recites that it is for ground rent from September 1, 1909, to September 1, 1910. The receipts for the rent for other years, if any were taken, are not accounted for, but some checks for the sum of $25 which it is shown were sent to Harmison for the annual rental, are introduced, which indicate, because of the dates therein, that the rent was paid as of the 1st of September, but there is no statement in them as to when the rental year began. When Harmison testified, he in general terms swore that the contract correctly expressed the agreement had between him and Wheeler and Shoupe, and he attempts to explain the two receipts introduced in evidence and above referred to by saying that the rental years therein referred to should have commenced on the 14th of August instead of on the 1st of September. It is significant that while both Shoupe and Wheeler testify that there was a positive understanding and agreement, after negotiations, as to the date at which the lease should commence, Harmison on cross-examination says he does not think there was any definite time agreed upon; that there might have been, but he will not be positive about it.

[1, 2] That equity has jurisdiction to reform a contract because of a mutual mistake is not questioned, nor can there be any question that when such reformation is resisted the evidence to justify the same must be clear, convincing and satisfactory. When, however, the evidence is of that character a court of equity will not hesitate to reform a contract and make it speak the real agreement of the parties. The fact that one of the parties denies the right of reformation will not defeat relief, for it may be said as a general rule that if all of the parties were agreed upon this question there would be no litigation. Such a controversy arises as a rule upon the refusal of one of the parties to submit to any change in the contract as written. As above indicated, the oral evidence of Shoupe and Wheeler is clear, positive, and direct that the term was to begin on the 1st of September, 1907, while the testimony of Harmison, when directed to their negotiations upon this particular question, is simply that he does not recollect. If the case depended solely upon the oral testimony, it seems to us that it meets the requirements of the law, but in addition to this oral testimony there is another element which in our judgment is conclusive in favor of the plaintiffs. The receipts introduced in evidence show upon their face that the parties treated the rental years as beginning on the 1st of September, and ending upon the 1st day of the following September. Why would Harmison have put such language in a receipt for the rents if that was not the agreement of the parties? And it is significant that even after this controversy arose Harmison's counsel, in a letter dated August 21, 1917, in referring to a check sent by the plaintiffs to Harmison, uses this significant language:

"I presume you mean this check to pay for the lease of F. L. Harmison to W. W. Hanly, J. C. Shoupe and George R. Wheeler for the years 1916-17, viz., to September 1, 1917."

It seems that the parties were so impressed with the fact that the lease began on the 1st of September that even after the controversy arose Harmison's counsel expressed this view as above indicated. The evidence in this case upon the part of the plaintiffs is of that clear, positive, and direct character required for the reformation of a contract, and it is met only by the equivocal statements of the defendant. Of course, the written contract is presumably correct. The parties have executed it, and there is a very strong presumption that all of their pertinent prior negotiations are correctly embodied in it. This presumption, however, as before stated, may be rebutted, but because of the peculiar weight to which written contracts are entitled between the parties, the evidence to do so must satisfy the court that a mistake has been made. When this character of evidence is produced and the court is fully satisfied that one of the parties is being deprived of a substantial right because of such a mistake, it will not hesitate to grant relief by way of reformation. Melott v. West, 76 W. Va. 739, 86 S. E. 759.

In this case the evidence convinces us that the plaintiffs are right in their contention, and we will therefore reverse the decree of the court below, reinstate and perpetuate the temporary injunction, and enter a decree here, reforming the contract of lease so as to make the term begin on the 1st of September, 1907, and requiring the defendant Harmison to execute a renewal of said lease for an additional term of 10 years, beginning on the 1st of September, 1917, and remand the cause for the purpose of executing this part of the decree by a commissioner of the court, should the defendant fail or refuse to execute and deliver such renewal, with costs to the plaintiffs in this court and in the court below.

COOK POTTERY CO. v. J. H. PARKER & SON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 13, 1921. Rehearing Denied
Dec. 9, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Patents §182—Party may license use of invention pending application for letters patent.

A license to use an invention, for which proper application for letters patent has been filed, may be given before the patent has been granted, and, if acted upon by applying the invention in the manufacture of articles, will avail to protect the licensee in its use afterwards.

2. Patents §182—Applicant may license use of invention under contract which will protect licensee after issue of patent.

One who has applied for letters patent on a useful invention has an inchoate right of property in such invention on which he can base a contract with another person for license to that other person to use the invention in the manufacture of articles of commerce pending the application for letters patent, and whereby the licensee will be protected in such manufacture after the patent is formally granted.

3. Patents §216—Protection of licensee to use of invention after patent forms a part of consideration for license issued prior to patent.

A license to use an invention, pending the application for letters patent thereon, is sufficient consideration for a contract between the inventor and the licensee whereby articles of commerce may be manufactured by the licensee and placed upon the market on a royalty basis to the inventor. The protection of the licensee in the use of the invention when patented enters into and forms a part of the consideration for such contract. Benefits to be derived by each party to a contract furnish a sufficient consideration for it.

4. Patents §216—Contract held valid and to support plea of set-off.

A special plea of set-off embodying such contract should be permitted to be filed in a case in which the damages accruing by a breach of such contract is a proper set-off to the obligation sued upon; the objection to the plea being that the contract is void for want of consideration.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

5. Contracts §67—Insolvents' agreement that claim should not be discharged through bankruptcy held a consideration for contract.

Where defendants were about to pass through bankruptcy when creditors would receive nothing, the saving of plaintiff's claim was a sufficient consideration for the continuation of an agreement between the parties.

6. Appeal and error §1099(1)—Matters which are or might have been passed on are concluded.

Whatever is contained in the record on appeal is supposed to have been passed on, and whatever is passed on or might have been passed on in consideration of the record is concluded and settled, and is the law of the case.

7. Contracts §176(10), 213(1)—Where time not fixed a reasonable time is understood, and may be fixed by the court and jury.

Where a contract under which one-half of commissions to be paid by plaintiffs should be applied on debts owing from the defendant contained no definite agreement as to its termination, it was not invalid for such reason, a reasonable time being contemplated, and what would be a reasonable time was for the court and jury under the circumstances.

Case Certified from Circuit Court, Wood County.

Action by the Cook Pottery Company against J. H. Parker & Son. Demurrers to special pleadings of set-off and objections to notice of recoupment filed by defendants overruled by the court, which refused to strike out the same, and certified the case for review. Affirmed.

C. D. Merrick, of Parkersburg, for plaintiff.

H. P. Camden and Marshall & Forrer, all of Parkersburg, for defendant.

LIVELY, J. The action of the circuit court in overruling demurrers to two special pleas of set-off, and in overruling objections of the plaintiff to the notice of recoupment filed by the defendants, and in refusing to strike the same out, has been certified to this court for review. The case was before this court on somewhat similar questions raised by this record, and is reported as Pottery Co. v. Parker, 86 W. Va. 580, 104 S. E. 51.

Plaintiff sued defendants on certain notes aggregating $5,170, and defendants tendered two special pleas of set-off designated as special plea No. 1 and special plea No. 2, and a notice of recoupment. The circuit court refused to permit either of the special pleas or the notice of recoupment to be filed, and that action and holding was formerly certified to this court, and it was held here that special plea No. 1 and the notice of recoupment should have been permitted to be filed, thus reversing the circuit court; but the action of the lower court in rejecting special plea No. 2 was affirmed, as will be seen from an inspection of the reported case above referred to.

Now defendants have tendered two more special pleas of set-off designated as special pleas No. 3 and No. 4, respectively, and also another notice of recoupment marked No. 2, both of which special pleas and the notice of recoupment No. 2 were permitted to be filed, and demurrers of the plaintiff thereto and motion to strike out overruled and refused. It is this disposition of the pleas and notice by the circuit court which is now here for review. In plea No. 1, heretofore held to be proper and directed to be filed, the defendants relied on a contract between them and plaintiff, made the 8th of October, 1915, whereby, in consideration of the defendants agreeing to permit plaintiffs to manufacture the "Wedge knob," with the use, in the manufacture thereof, of the "Nailit knob," a device then "owned and controlled" by defendants, the plaintiff agreed to manufacture and sell exclusively to defendants the "Wedge knob" at the price of $5.65 per 1,000, plus a stipulated price for tenpenny nails and leather washers used in the manufacture; and that the plaintiff was to add to the price aforesaid 24 cents per 1,000 to be credited on the books of the plaintiff in reduction of indebtedness of the defendants to plaintiff; and that said agreement was to continue for 5 years, and as long thereafter as either party did not violate the provisions of the contract, and then to be canceled at the option of the party who did not violate it.

The breach averred and set-off relied upon is that plaintiff violated this contract by manufacturing and selling directly to other persons large quantities of said manufactured article, which, at the rate of 24 cents per 1,000, the sum per 1,000 to which defendants were entitled by virtue of said contract, amounted to the sum of $7,200, and which they were entitled to receive from plaintiff, and claimed set-off to that amount against the notes sued on. Plea No. 3, now in controversy, is substantially the same as plea No. 1. It avers the same matter, but goes more into detail. It alleges at length how it "owned and controlled" the device known as the "Naillit knob." It also alleges that the contract of October 8, 1915, on which the pleas are based, was in writing, under seal, and makes profert thereof. This contract is brought into the record by the craving of oyer thereof by the plaintiff. The amount claimed as and for the breach of the contract is stated at the sum of $10,000, whereas plea No. 1 alleges it to be $7,200. This additional sum is evidently intended to cover the period between the dates of the filing of the two pleas. The only other difference is that plea No. 3 alleges that the indebtedness of the defendants to plaintiff on which the 24 cents per 1,000 for the manufactured knobs was to be credited is the same indebtedness on which plaintiff is now suing. The controlling ownership of the "Naillit knob" device alleged in plea No. 1 is described in extenso by plea No. 3. It is averred, substantially, that William Morrill Parker, one of the defendants, in January, 1915, filed application for letters patent in the United States Patent Office for the device known as the "Naillit knob," and thereafter it was controlled by the defendants; that in May, 1915, the plaintiff, learning of this device, entered into negotiations with defendants culminating in the contract for the use of this device in the manufacture of the "Wedge knob," then being manufactured by plaintiff, on a royalty basis; that defendants ascertained, after said contract had been made, that one A. H. Fargo had also applied for letters patent on a device similar to that of the "Naillit knob," and, in order to protect the plaintiff in the license granted it by defendant in the contract of October 8, 1915, acquired by writing under seal from Fargo sole and exclusive license to use said invention, said sole and exclusive license being taken by J. H. Parker & Son, Incorporated, but that defendants J. H. Parker & Son should have the benefit of the same in order to protect the plaintiff in the license granted to it by the contract of October 8, 1915; that afterwards on February 3, 1920, letters patent for said invention were duly issued to an assignee of Fargo, who afterwards, on April 28, 1920, granted to J. H. Parker & Son, Inc., the exclusive right and license to make, use, and sell devices embodying the invention, throughout the United States and territories thereof, for the full life of the patent; and that defendants, by virtue thereof, and by the application filed by W. M. Parker for letters patent, have always controlled the right to manufacture and sell the "Naillit knob," a name used to designate any two-piece knob for electrical work assembled with a nail and fastened together by means of a washer or swedge or other projection on the lower part of the knob.

[1, 2] Plaintiff strenuously contends that the plea is bad, and demurrer thereto should have been sustained, because, as counsel avers, this extended description of the ownership and control of the "Naillit knob" device in fact shows that defendants did not have ownership and control thereof; and that therefore they had no right to make the use of the "Naillit knob" device the basis or consideration of the contract of October 8, 1915, and that said contract was therefore without consideration, and void; in other words, that, pending an application for letters patent, the applicant has no such ownership or control of the device sought to be patented as would give him the right to license or permit another to use it. It is claimed that plaintiff already had full power and right to use this device in the manufacture of its "Wedge knob," pending defendants' application for patent thereon, and that, when it signed this contract, although under seal, there was no basis for its so doing—no consideration therefor. An inventor has an inchoate right of property in an invention pending his application for patent, with which he may deal as an article of property. Gayler v. Wilder, 10 How. 477, 13 L. Ed. 504; Richardson v. Essex Machine Co., 207 Mass. 219, 93 N. E. 650. A license to use a device for which application for letters patent is pending may be given, and if acted upon and the device used by the licensee in the manufacture of articles in which the invention is used, it will avail to protect the licensee in the use thereof after the invention is patented. Burton v. Burton Stock-Car Co., 171 Mass. 437, 50 N. E. 1029.

[3] While it may be true that pending an application for a patent the applicant has no exclusive right to its use, which doctrine is laid down in Gayler v. Wilder, supra, and Marsh v. Nichols, 128 U. S. 612, 9 Sup. Ct. 168, 32 L. Ed. 538, yet the use by another of the device sought to be patented, pending the application, ceases when the patent has been granted. Evans v. Jordan, 9 Cranch, 199, 3 L. Ed. 704. If the allegation of this plea be true, then the inducement and consideration to the Cook Pottery Company for the contract of October 8, 1915, was to obtain the right to use this device not only pending the application, but to be protected in its use after the device had been invented. The contract is a sealed instrument, and implies consideration. Moreover, it may be that the payment of the indebtedness mentioned in the plea as that sued on is consideration moving the plaintiff to enter into the contract by which the royalty to Parker of 24 cents per 1,000 on the articles manufactured and sold was to be credited on its books against said indebtedness. If there be consideration, however small, especially where the agreement is under seal, and the parties have operated thereunder, it will be sufficient to relieve the contract against a failure for want of consideration. It is not for the courts to control the amount of consideration in contracts. The parties must agree upon that.

It is alleged that the contract does not in terms grant a license or permit the plaintiff to manufacture the assembled knob by using the "Nailit knob," and therefore is at variance with the plea. The contract must be considered in the light of the allegations of the plea. If there be a difference in the construction of the contract on this point, and it be necessary to construe the contract upon its introduction on the trial, presuming its true intent and meaning cannot be ascertained from the instrument itself, possibly evidence allunde would be permitted to show the intention of the parties. That question does not properly arise here.

It is asserted that the contract is void because in restraint of trade. Without reviewing the authorities on the question of the right of a patentee to put on the market articles manufactured under his invention with restrictions as to price and the like, or whether he, having a monopoly in his invention and complete property right therein, can refuse to permit the use of his invention except under stringent and monopolistic restrictions, it is sufficient to say that the same objection of restraint of trade would apply to plea No. 1 which this court on the former certification held to be good and permitted to be filed. It is a closed question so far as this case is now concerned. Campbell's Ex'rs v. Campbell's Ex'rs, 22 Grat. (63 Va.) 649.

The substance of the objection to plea No. 3 in relation to the allegations therein concerning the application and issuance of the Fargo patent, and the purchase by J. M. Parker & Son, Incorporated, of the exclusive right and license to make, use, and sell devices embodying the invention throughout the states and territories of the United States, is that the plaintiff is not protected thereby in the manufacture of the particular article set out in the contract. The plea in substance alleges that defendants have caused the purchase of the Fargo invention with the express intention and purpose of protecting the right given by them to plaintiff in the contract for the manufacture of the two-piece assembled knob, and to fully protect that contract and all the rights of the plaintiff thereunder and that by virtue of an understanding and agreement with J. M. Parker & Son, Incorporated, a corporation owned and controlled by defendants, they have fully assured and conserved to plaintiff the integrity of the contract. Whether or not this can be supported by the evidence is a question for jury determination. It does not render the plea bad on demurrer.

Plea No. 4 is similar to plea No. 3 and is objected to for the same reasons urged against plea No. 3. The only material difference is that it alleges an additional sum of $5,000 accruing to defendants by virtue of the breach between time of the institution of the suit and the 8th day of October, 1920, the time of the expiration of the contract. We can see no objection to this plea because it covers a period of the breach possibly not covered by pleas Nos. 1 or 3.

[5, 6] Notice of recoupment No. 2 is the same as notice of recoupment No. 1 heretofore held to be good, and directed to be filed by this court. The only difference therein is the additional allegation that defendants had, prior to March 14, 1916, built up a large and profitable business in selling the electrical porcelain products manufactured by the plaintiff, which had become permanent, fixed, and established, and brought about by great expense in time, labor, and money, and was then resulting in sales averaging $25,000 per year on which defendants, by reason of their selling agreement with plaintiff, were receiving commissions of 10 per cent, amounting to an average of $2,500 a year, of all of which plaintiff had notice. The loss and damage claimed in this notice, occasioned by the breach, is alleged at $12,500, whereas in recoupment No. 1 filed, it is alleged to be $10,000. It would serve no useful purpose (except convenience) to set out fully notice of recoupment No. 1, heretofore filed. It can be seen by inspection of the reported case in 86 W. Va., at page 580, 104 S. E., 51. The first objection to notice of recoupment No. 2 is that the alleged agreement is without consideration; that the agreement to pay the debts owing by defendants to plaintiff, there in set out, was no consideration, because defendants were already bound to pay them. The notice avers that the consideration for continuing the selling agreement was that defendants would not be discharged from paying them by passing through bankruptcy proceedings, which they were then about to invoke. They had no assets, and, if forced into bankruptcy, could pay their creditors nothing. It was to save plaintiff's claims now sued on that the agreement was made, as alleged in the notice. We think this a sufficient consideration. It was tacitly so determined upon the former hearing. Whatever is contained in the record on appeal is supposed to have been passed on, and whatever is passed on by this court or might have been passed upon on consideration of the record is concluded and settled. It is the law of the case. Krise v. Ryan, 90 Va. 711, 19 S. E. 783.

[7] Another objection is that the notice of recoupment alleges no time in which the contract would run, no date for its termination, and therefore plaintiff could terminate the agreement at any time, and that it did on March 14, 1916, after the agreement had continued for two years. The notice says that the time for the payment of the debts was to be extended and the debts carried by plaintiff until they could be fully paid by the application of one-half the commissions provided for in the agreement, to the payment thereof, which debts were and are the debts now sued on. This would make the time for the running of the contract indefinite, depending upon when the debts would be paid under that arrangement. A part performance of this contract is alleged to have been made by which about $1,500 had been actually paid. It is apparent that a reasonable time for the running of the contract was contemplated by the parties, and what would be a reasonable time is for the court and jury to determine under all the facts and circumstances. We do not think the notice is bad for that reason.

No objection is urged by counsel for plaintiff against the new matter set out in notice of recoupment No. 2 relating to the termination of defendants' established trade in the porcelain products manufactured by plaintiff, by reason of the breach of the alleged agreement by plaintiff; and it will not be considered and passed upon.

[4] We affirm the action of the circuit court in permitting special pleas of set-off Nos. 3 and 4, and notice of recoupment No. 2 to be filed, and in overruling the demurrers to said pleas, and in refusing to strike out the notice of recoupment No. 2.

Affirmed.

BENNETT et al. v. INTERSTATE COOPERAGE CO. et al. and seven other cases.
(Nos. 4236-4243.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 18, 1921. Rehearing Denied
Dec. 9, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Logs and logging §3(7)—Grant of timber with right to remove held to vest irrevocable right in grantees.

A deed granting the timber upon a tract of land, with the right to cut and remove the same within a definite time, upon a substantial pecuniary consideration, vests in the grantee and his assigns an irrevocable right to do the acts contemplated in such deed.

2. Logs and logging §3(14)—Cessation of operations by grantees of timber on land held not an abandonment.

A right so conferred is not lost or terminated by cessation of timber operations upon the land for a few months, and by the removal therefrom of the mills and tramroads used for such timber operations, nor by the failure of the owner of such timber to have it entered upon the land books and charged with taxes for one year. In order to work an abandonment of such right, the facts and circumstances relied upon for that purpose must show a clear, intent on the part of the owner of such timber to permanently forego any further right or interest therein.

3. Logs and logging §3(14)—Provision in deed of timber that purchaser shall surrender certain acreage each year may be waived by grantor's failure to enforce.

A provision in a deed conveying the timber upon a large tract of land that the purchaser shall surrender back each year a certain acreage of said land, together with the timber remaining thereon, may be waived by the grantor in such deed, and such a waiver may arise from such grantor not enforcing such provision in consideration of which he is relieved of an obligation which he is under to the grantee to provide rights of way for removing the timber.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Calhoun County.

A suit by Sallie M. Bennett and others against the Interstate Cooperage Company, and suits by Ursley J. Offutt, by E. L. J. Smith, by Elliott Chenoweth, by H. E. Crawford, by Charles Laughlin, by R. B. Elisman, and by W. T. Crawford, against C. N. Snodgrass and others, in each of which there was a decree for the plaintiffs, and the defendants appealed. The suits were considered together. The first case is reversed, injunction dissolved, and remanded, with directions, while in the remaining seven cases the decrees are reversed, injunctions dissolved, and bills dismissed.

R. F. Kidd, of Glenville, L. H. Barnett, of Weston, and Blue & McCabe, of Charleston, for appellants.

A. C. Mathews, of Grantsville, for appellees.

RITZ, P. By these suits the plaintiffs seek to enjoin the defendants from cutting and removing any of the timber from a tract of 27,000 acres of land situate in Braxton, Gilmer and Calhoun counties. They are controlled by the same legal principles, for which reason they will be considered together.

On the 11th of July, 1906, Louis Bennett, W. G. Bennett, Gertrude B. Howell, and Mary B. Bowle conveyed to the defendant Interstate Cooperage Company all the timber on a tract of a little more than 27,000 acres of land situate in Braxton, Gilmer, and Calhoun counties. This deed included by its terms all the timber on said land that the purchaser might desire to remove except fruit trees and shade trees in the yards or curtilages of the houses thereon. The conveyance then contained conditions and provisions in regard to the removal of the timber as follows:

"It is, however, expressly understood and agreed that second party is to examine such land as may heretofore have been improved, or from which the timber may have been wholly or partly removed, and on or before January 1, 1909, by metes and bounds, surrender such timber as then remains upon the same as it may in fairness regard to be without merchantable value. And in addition thereto said second party shall by said January 1, 1909, remove the timber from at least two thousand acres, in addition to that surrendered as improved or timberless land, and surrender back to first parties, their heirs or assigns, all timber remaining on said two thousand acres, which is to be designated by metes and bounds if first parties desire it. First parties are to pay the cost of surveying all land surrendered to them.

"And second party is also each year after January 1, 1909, to remove the timber from at least fifteen hundred additional acres of said land, to be removed from reasonably compact parcels thereof, though they need not adjoin each other, and the timber then remaining on said parcels is yearly from said January 1, 1909, to be surrendered back to first parties, their heirs or assigns, by metes and bounds as aforesaid, as though it had never been sold by them. And it is also expressly understood and agreed that all timber that may remain on said boundaries from which it is hereby conveyed after January 1, 1925, shall without further notice or motion and by force and effect hereof revert back and belong to said first parties, their heirs or assigns, as though it had never been sold; and all rights, interests, and privileges of second party, its successors, or assigns, in any timber thereon not then removed shall totally cease thereafter."

[1] The primary purpose of the defendant cooperage company in acquiring the timber on this tract of land was to secure so much thereof as was fit to be manufactured into barrel staves and headings. Immediately after the conveyance aforesaid the cooperage company began its operations on the land. It went over it and cut the oak timber in large quantities, constructed railroads so as to remove said timber to its various mills erected on the lands, and the manufactured product from the mills to the point of shipment. It also during the time sold considerable quantities of timber besides that suitable for staves and headings. It will be observed that the deed provides that by the 1st of January, 1909, the said cooperage company shall surrender by metes and bounds to the grantors the timber on such of the lands as it may in fairness regard to be without marketable value, and also 2,000 acres of the land in addition to this, and on the 1st of January of each year thereafter 1,500 acres of such lands, and that the right of the cooperage company to cut and remove the timber from said land will expire on the 1st of January, 1925, and all timber then remaining uncut upon said land at that time revert to and become the property of the grantors. The cooperage company did not on the 1st of January, 1909, execute any deed of surrender for such of the lands as it found were improved, and the timber thereon not of marketable quality. It is shown that at the time the transaction was made it was estimated that there were about 2,000 acres of land which had been cleared and improved, and that there was a deduction made from the purchase price of $30,000 to cover this 2,000 acres at $15 per acre, the price at which the timber was purchased. Nor did the said cooperage company surrender 2,000 additional acres of the land from which it had cut the timber at that time, nor did it surrender 1,500 acres on the 1st of January of each year thereafter.

The cooperage company's operations upon the land commenced in Braxton county, and, as the timber was removed from the land in that county, extended into Gilmer county, and thence into Calhoun county. In 1913 Louis Bennett, who, it appears, conducted all of the transactions for the grantors in the deed, took up with the cooperage company the matter of surrendering some of the lands, the timber upon which had been conveyed to it. It was the desire of the parties, if possible, to make such surrender without being put to the expense of making additional surveys. While the large tract of more than 27,000 acres of land was in a comparatively compact body, it was made up of many smaller tracts, and the deed to the cooperage company conveyed the timber by the metes and bounds of these smaller tracts, and the parties desired to surrender as many of these smaller tracts described in the deed of conveyance as were ready to be turned back. It was found at that time that the cooperage company had cut the timber off of all the lands lying in Braxton county except a small tract of about 40 acres. These lands lying in Braxton county were made up of much smaller tracts than the tracts making up the lands in Gilmer and Calhoun counties. The cooperage company advised Bennett that it could surrender back practically all of the lands in Braxton county, and he prepared a surrender deed to be executed by the cooperage company releasing unto the Bennetts certain tracts of land, describing them by the metes and bounds given in the deed made by him and his associates to the cooperage company. This deed, as prepared by Bennett, included between 5,000 and 6,000 acres. He sent it to the cooperage company for execution, and upon examination it was found that it did not contain all of the tracts which the cooperage company desired to surrender. It was rewritten and made to include more than 7,000 acres. A provision was put in this deed, as prepared by Bennett, not waiving any of the rights of the grantors for failure of the cooperage company to make the surrenders as required by the terms of the deed, or to comply with any other provisions of the conveyance, and this provision was carried into the deed as rewritten, but in a little different form. No further surrenders of the land, or any part thereof, had been made at the time of the institution of these suits.

It appears that in the year 1916 Bennett took up with the cooperage company the matter of making further surrenders, and it advised him that it was ready to surrender a very large part of the area, but that it could not do so from the descriptions contained in the deed of conveyance to it, for the reason that the proper conduct of its operations did not permit cutting the timber clean on any one of the tracts of land, but involved large parts of a number of the tracts. It will be remembered that these boundaries in Gilmer and Calhoun counties were much larger than the boundaries in Braxton county, one of them containing something like 10,000 acres. Prior to this time Bennett had had most of the land cut up into smaller lots or tracts, with a view of selling the same for small farms. These tracts ranged in size from 15 to 200 acres. A map had been made showing these small farms by metes and bounds; and, with a view to securing the surrender by the cooperage company of some of the lands without being required to make surveys, Bennett sent one of these maps to that company, and asked it if it could therefrom pick out the lands from which it had cut the timber, and surrender the same according to the metes and bounds of the farms as shown by this map. After making an examination of the map the cooperage company's officers were able to point out but a very few of the small tracts which could be surrendered in accordance with the descriptions shown on the map. Bennett was advised of their inability to make the surrenders from the descriptions contained on the map, and of the necessity for making additional surveys to that end. He made no answer to this communication, and no further negotiations were had so far as is shown by the record in regard to the surrenders of the land, or any part of it, until after the death of Louis Bennett. In the year 1917 there was some correspondence between Bennett and the cooperage company and its lawyer in regard to securing rights of way for the purpose of removing the timber from certain parts of the land. There was a collateral contract at the time the deed was made by which the Bennetts agreed that they would furnish certain rights of way for the removal of the timber. Bennett's contention was that his contract did not require him to secure the rights of way demanded, while the cooperage company contended that he was under obligation to secure the same. This controversy seems to have been terminated in August, 1917, by a letter written by Bennett to the cooperage company, in which, among other things, he said:

"But I am disposed to think that in the final adjustment of all matters my leniency toward you in not enforcing the surrender of timber territory, and your fairness and accommodation to me, would, perhaps, offset each other and settle all such matters."

It appears that no further demands were made for the rights of way in question, and the matter was there allowed to rest.

In the spring of 1918 the cooperage company had removed from the land all of the timber suitable for making staves and headings that was accessible to its tramroads and railroads. It had theretofore cut large quantities of the other timber and sold it to other parties, and had also sold considerable of the other timber upon the stump to other parties who cut and manufactured the same, but at this time there was still remaining on the land a considerable amount of valuable timber which the cooperage company determined to sell as a whole. At that time it was under a contract with Vansant Kitchen & Co. to cut and deliver all of certain kinds of timber upon the lands at certain prices. Because of the increased cost of cutting the timber and putting it in the streams, this contract had become very burdensome, resulting in considerable loss to the cooperage company. Before, however, it could dispose of the remaining timber, it was necessary to secure a cancellation of this contract. In March or April, 1918, the cooperage company agreed with the defendant Snodgrass to sell the remaining timber upon the land to him for the sum of $6,500, conditioned, however, upon it being able to secure a cancellation of the Vansant Kitchen & Company contract. Negotiations were entered into with that company, which resulted, in September, 1918, in a cancellation of that contract upon the payment to that company by the cooperage company of the sum of $10,000, and on the same day the cooperage company executed the contract selling the remaining timber to Snodgrass.

In the spring of 1918 the cooperage company removed all of its mills from the land, took up its steel railroads, and had determined to discontinue its operations thereon. In the fall of 1918, after the transfer of the remaining timber to the defendant Snodgrass, the defendant Turner acquired from Snodgrass a one-half interest therein, and they began operations with a view to the removal of this timber. The plaintiffs in the seven last above-named suits had purchased from Louis Bennett and his associates small tracts of the lands included in the 27,000 acres, all of the deeds to them being made subject to the rights of the cooperage company in the deed of July, 1906. When Snodgrass and Turner began their operations, the same extended upon the lands of these plaintiffs, and they, beginning in January, 1919, brought suits in equity for the purpose of enjoining Snodgrass and Turner from removing any of the timber from the tracts of land purchased by them, asserting that the cooperage company had lost its title to any of said timber because it had abandoned the same, and that when it made the deed to Snodgrass it had nothing to convey to him. A little later in the same year the plaintiffs in the first above entitled suit, being the grantors in the deed of July, 1906, and the successors to such of them as had in the meantime died, brought suit seeking to enjoin the timber operations. The basis of this suit is that the cooperage company had abandoned its timber rights, for which reason the deed to Snodgrass was ineffective to pass any title to the timber, or any part thereof, and further that, by the terms of the deed granting the timber to the cooperage company, it was required to make surrenders each year of 1,500 acres, as well as of the improved land, and 2,000 acres on the 1st of January, 1909, and that under this provision there should have been surrendered at the time of the institution of the suit at least 19,000 acres of land, whereas there had only been surrendered some 7,000 acres; that Snodgrass and Turner were attempting to cut over all of the land not actually surrendered by deed, whereas, if they had any rights at all, it would only be to so much of the land as would remain after taking out the total acreage which should have been surrendered up to that time.

Upon a hearing of the case the court below found that the cooperage company had not abandoned its timber rights, but that it still had title to some part of the timber upon said 27,000-acre tract of land at the time it made the conveyance to Snodgrass. He, however, perpetuated the temporary injunctions granted in the seven last above-named cases, and held in the first above-named case that Snodgrass and Turner would be entitled to cut timber from no more than about 8,000 acres of land; that, as they had gone upon the land and had cut timber from several of the tracts, as described in the original deed of conveyance to the cooperage company, in the aggregate amounting to more than 12,000 acres, they had exceeded their rights. In arriving at this conclusion that Snodgrass and Turner had cut over more territory than they were entitled to, the court charged them with the entire acreage of every tract of land as described in the original deed upon which they had carried on any operations, no matter how inconsiderable. To illustrate, there was one tract of land containing about 9,000 acres. The timber remaining on about 3,000 acres of this land was sold by Snodgrass and Turner to another party, and this other party was also given the privilege of cutting some trees which remained along the bank of a stream dividing the part sold from the part reserved for the purpose of surrender, and the court, because of the cutting of these few trees, held that Snodgrass and Turner had elected to take the whole 9,000-acre tract as a part of the lands they were entitled to cut over.

It appears that, when the plaintiffs in the seven last above-named suits began to question the right of Snodgrass and Turner to cut the timber remaining on the lands sold to the company by the Bennetts, Snodgrass took up with the Bennetts the matter of making surrenders of such parts of the land as should have been surrendered up to that time. It appears that there was ample acreage from which the timber had been entirely removed to make up all of the lands which, by the terms of the deed, should have been surrendered, but that, in order to make surrender deeds with any degree of accuracy, considerable surveying would necessarily have to be done. These tracts of land which were laid off into farms were divided upon the theory of making them convenient for farming purposes, and it was not practicable to conduct the timber operations so as to entirely remove the timber from any such tract as the work progressed. Snodgrass asked the Bennetts to have their surveyor go with him upon the ground, with a view of determining the boundaries of such lands as could be surrendered. They directed a surveyor to go upon the ground, but instructed him that, in accepting any surrenders from Snodgrass, he must be required to keep as the part of the lands upon which he was still entitled to cut the timber the whole area of any tract upon which he had theretofore carried on any operations, regardless of the extent of these operations, or of the area of the tract. Of course these instructions did not consist with the terms of the deed, and Snodgrass did not accede thereto. The surveyor, however, with Snodgrass, was engaged at the time the suits were brought in endeavoring to ascertain the boundaries of such lands as could be surrendered.

After the Bennett suit was instituted the Bennett surveyor discontinued his activities, and Snodgrass and Turner continued to make such investigations as would enable them to surrender a considerable part of the land. As a result thereof a deed was prepared surrendering to the Bennetts what Snodgrass and Turner and their surveyor claim is over 12,000 acres, and what the Bennett surveyor claims is a little more than 9,000 acres. This surrender deed was filed by Snodgrass and Turner with their answer in this case, and is tendered as a full compliance with the requirements of the deed of July, 1906, by which the timber was conveyed by the Bennetts to the cooperage company. From the decrees of the circuit court above indicated, Snodgrass and Turner prosecute these appeals.

The appellants contend that the conclusion of the circuit court that there had been no abandonment of its rights by the Interstate Cooperage Company at the time of the transfer of the remaining timber by it to Snodgrass is well supported by the evidence, while the plaintiffs contend that this conclusion of the circuit court is wrong; that it should have held that the Interstate Cooperage Company had lost, by abandonment, its rights prior to the time it made the deed to Snodgrass, and should not only have perpetuated the injunctions in the seven last above-named cases, but in the first above styled case as well. This contention that the cooperage company had abandoned its rights under the timber deed is based upon the fact that it had taken up its tramroads and steel railroad tracks, and had removed its mills from the land in the spring of 1918, before the conveyance to Snodgrass, and that for that year it had directed the assessor of Calhoun county to omit from the tax books of that county any charge against it on account of standing timber, the representation being that the same had been removed, and, further, upon certain statements made by various employees of the cooperage company that the company had completed its operations upon the tract of land, and was moving out, or similar statements of like import. It is quite true that the cooperage company did remove its mills and its railroads from these lands in the spring of 1918. The mills upon the land were for the purpose of cutting staves and headings, and when it had completed the cutting of this class of material, of course it had no further use for these mills. The tramroads and railroad tracks built upon the land were also largely for the purpose of hauling this stave timber to the mills, and from the mills to the railroad station for loading. The timber remaining upon the land was such timber as it was expected to remove by hauling the same to floatable streams, by means of which it could be carried to its destination. It appears that a large part of this class of timber which had been theretofore cut had been carried to market in this way.

It must be borne in mind that the deed from the Bennetts to the cooperage company conveyed the timber on this 27,000 acres of land. It vested the title to this timber in the cooperage company. Of course, in order to have the benefit of that title, it was necessary that the timber be all cut before the 1st of January, 1925, because the deed provides that after that date all timber remaining upon the land shall revert to and become the property of the grantors. Are the facts shown in this case sufficient to prove an abandonment by the cooperage company? That there is a large amount of valuable timber still remaining upon the land is unquestioned; that the cooperage company, in the spring of 1918, had negotiated the sale of this timber to Snodgrass, and only waited to consummate this sale until it could relieve itself of the Vansant Kitchen & Company contract, is undisputed. The taking up of the tracks and the moving of the mills do not necessarily indicate that the cooperage company had disclaimed any title to the remaining timber. It is contended that the request to the assessor not to carry the timber upon the land books for the year 1918 in the name of the cooperage company, because it had already been removed, conclusively shows that it had abandoned whatever rights it had upon the land. The officers of the cooperage company say that they did not know that the tax return contained any such notation. It was made upon the return of personal property made by the company in a place where no one would have reason to expect such a notation to be made, and the officers of the company say that if they had known that any such return had been made they would have disapproved it and disallowed it. Whether this is true or not, we do not think is material. The failure of an owner of property to return it for taxation is not of itself sufficient evidence to show that he has disclaimed title to the property. It is common knowledge that many citizens successfully escape the payment of the taxes which they should pay, but this fact has never been held sufficient to divest them of the title to the property upon which they had not paid taxes, and vest it in some one else who might be fortunate enough to secure the temporary possession of it.

[2] Another ground relied upon by the plaintiffs to show abandonment by the cooperage company is that it cut over all of this land, sometimes more than once. This is quite true. The cooperage company had cut over practically all of the land so far as the stave and heading timber was concerned. The evidence shows that its method of removing the timber was to go over a tract of land first and cut out the stave and heading timber; then it frequently went over it again and cut out the poplar timber, and still again and cut out the hickory suitable for spokes and handles, and frequently again, and cut out telegraph and telephone poles and other classes of timber. This process was carried on during all of the time it was engaged in its operations, and no objections to conducting the operations in this manner were ever made by any of the interested parties, nor could any objection be made upon that account. There was nothing in the deed which required the cooperage company to remove all of the timber from a particular tract of land as its operations progressed. The case of Kunst v. Mabie, 72 W. Va. 202, 77 S. E. 987, is relied upon to support this contention of the plaintiffs. The contract in that case required the purchaser to cut the timber off clean as he went over it, and, as construed by the court, did not permit him to go back over the land and cut further timber after it had once been cut over and operations discontinued thereon. There is no such requirement as that in the contract in this case, and the conduct of the parties in carrying on their operations shows that they did not so construe it. We are of the opinion that the court below was right in his holding that there was no abandonment by the cooperage company of its rights under the timber deed, and that whatever timber it had the right to cut thereunder was transferred to and became vested in Snodgrass.

[3] The plaintiffs, however, insist that the decree of the lower court is right, for the reason that, according to their construction of the timber deed, it must be considered that the lands required to be surrendered each year were automatically surrendered, and, this being so, there would only remain a little over 8,000 acres of the land to be cut over by Snodgrass at the time of the transfer to him. It might be pertinent to inquire what 1,500 acres were surrendered each year. There are no particular 1,500 acres of land described in the deed to be surrendered each and every year, nor is there any way pointed out by which the court could ascertain which 1,500 acres the purchaser of the timber was required to surrender. It may be doubted whether, if Bennett had attempted to compel the specific execution of the contract in this regard, he could have been successful, for the reason that the subject-matter of the surrender each year is not determined by the contract itself, nor is there any method pointed out for the determination of this acreage except the action of the parties. It may be that this provision in the deed is no more than a condition for the violation of which an action at law might be maintained. Our view of the case, however, renders it unnecessary for us to pass upon this question. The defendants insist that Bennett waived this provision of the contract: First, by accepting the surrender in 1913 of the 7,000 acres under the circumstances existing at that time; and, second, by his subsequent conduct in not asking for further surrenders, but in virtually foregoing this provision of the contract in consideration that he be not required to furnish certain rights of way which the company was insisting he was under obligation to furnish.

As before stated, Bennett never demanded performance of this part of the contract until the year 1913, when the deed surrendering a little over 7,000 acres was delivered. In this deed a provision was inserted that it should not prejudice the rights of either of the parties to rely upon any provision of the contract which had not been complied with, and in a letter from Bennett in regard to this provision he advised the company that he did not expect to have any occasion to rely thereon, but simply put it in so that, in case the company undertook to be harsh or unreasonable with him in the final settlement, he might use it against it. After this time he made no further requests for surrenders of any of the property until 1916, when, as above indicated, he attempted to have further acreage relieved from the burden of the timber deed without being required to make additional surveys. When the conclusion was finally reached that this could not be done without such additional surveys, it appears that Bennett did not require the same. In fact, the cooperage company advised him that it was ready to have the surveying done if he desired it, so that it could surrender the acreage in accordance with the terms of the deed. The cost of such surveying was to be borne by the Bennetts, and it was but reasonable that the cooperage company, before incurring this expense, should get the consent of the Bennetts thereto. When the cooperage company in effect applied for this, Bennett remained silent, and further, in the next year, when the contention between the parties arose over the rights of way, Bennett put his own construction upon his conduct when he said that his leniency in not enforcing the surrenders, and the fairness and accommodation of the company to him, should offset each other and settle all such matters. This was in effect saying to the company: I had a right to demand of you that you surrender 1,500 acres of this land each year free from the burden of the timber deed. You have a right to require of me that I procure certain rights of way. I have relieved you of the requirement to surrender the 1,500 acres each year, and in consideration of this you should relieve me of the duty of procuring these rights of way. The company by its acquiescence accepted the proposition and that was the end of the matter.

There is no doubt but that the Bennetts might waive this requirement if they desired, and that they did waive it there seems to us no doubt. In addition to the correspondence which culminated in the letter above referred to, there is much proof here of conversations had by Louis Bennett with various people in which he stated that the rights of the cooperage company would not be extinguished until 1925. It was testified by some witnesses that when they talked with Bennett about these surrenders he expressed a preference that the matter be allowed to remain as it was until the expiration of the time provided in the deed for removing the timber. We do not think, therefore, that either the Bennetts, or any of those claiming under them, had any right to demand the surrender of the timber upon any of this land at the time of Louis Bennett's death. Whether such a right once waived can again be restored as to the future by making demand, we need not say. The surrender deed tendered by Snodgrass and Turner, admitting that it only covers the acreage claimed by the Bennetts, is sufficient to fully meet any requirements for surrender of territory up to that time. At the time the Bennett suit was brought it may be said that there was no right to demand the surrender of any of the territory. The conditions which the Bennetts required of Snodgrass and Turner they had no right to demand; that is, that they retain only 8,000 acres of the land, and that in this 8,000 acres the whole of any tract must be included upon which they had cut any timber, however insignificant the extent of such cutting might be. The plaintiffs in the seven last above-named suits can, of course, stand on no higher ground than their grantors. They took deeds to the land conveyed to them containing a provision that the same was subject to all of the rights of the Interstate Cooperage Company under its deed of July, 1906, and they cannot complain that their land has not been relieved of the burden cast thereon by this deed in advance of the time indicated therein for the expiration of the cooperage company's rights.

Our conclusion is to reverse all of the decrees complained of, dissolve the injunctions, and dismiss the bills in the seven last above-named causes, with costs to the appellants in this court, and in the court below; and as to the first above-named cause, it is remanded for the purpose of having the special receiver therein appointed make settlement of his accounts, with directions to thereupon discharge such special receiver and dismiss the suit.

FOGGIN v. FURBEE et al. (No. 4272.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 4, 1921. Rehearing Denied
Dec. 9, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Injunction \S 26(9)—Defendant may not enjoin ejectment because plaintiff's muniments of title cloud his.

A defendant in an action of ejectment, claiming good title to the property in controversy and having possession thereof, cannot maintain a bill to enjoin the action solely on the ground that the muniments of title of the plaintiff therein constitute a cloud upon his title.

2. Equity \S 44—Jurisdiction on fact issue being concurrent, defendant in ejectment cannot enjoin proceeding because plaintiff's title clouds his.

In a case of concurrent jurisdiction on an issue of fact on which a question of title depends, such as fraud, the court whose jurisdiction first attaches is entitled to retain it, and the defendant in an action of ejectment, relying upon a defense fully admissible in the law court, cannot transfer the controversy into a court of equity, by a bill to cancel the plaintiff's title papers, as constituting a cloud upon his title, and to enjoin prosecution of the action.

3. Injunction \S 26(9)—Ejectment action may be enjoined where plaintiff holds legal title as trustee for defendant with merely equitable title.

If, however, the title of the defendant in such an action is merely equitable, and the plaintiff holds the legal title under circumstances making the latter a trustee for the former, by reason of legal or actual fraud in the acquisition thereof, a bill to get in the legal title and enjoin prosecution of the action can be maintained.

4. Judicial sales \S 58—Grantee's purchaser under erroneous decree retains legal title after decree is set aside, though his title may be voidable for knowledge.

If, after a purchase of land sold under an erroneous decree of sale, by a party to the suit in which it was entered and confirmation of the sale, and before any steps have been taken to correct the error, the purchaser conveys the property to a stranger for value, the legal title passes by his deed; and if, on subsequent reversal of the decree, such stranger is not made a party, nor restitution of the title in any way effected, the legal title remains in him, even though it may be affected with an equity in favor of other persons, by reason of his having purchased with knowledge of facts rendering his title voidable.

5. Lis pendens \S 25(4)—Purchaser from party who had purchased under void decree held not purchaser pendente lite.

A stranger to the cause, purchasing under such circumstances, is not a pendente lite purchaser, even though he purchased from a party to the suit, because there was no pending suit at the time; the suit having terminated with the decree of sale and confirmation of the sale.

6. Lis pendens \S 25(4)—Remote purchaser under erroneous decree held not purchaser pendente lite.

Nor is a second stranger purchasing from the first a pendente lite purchaser.

7. Judicial sales \S 58—Title held voidable in the hands of remote purchaser with knowledge.

Nevertheless, if the purchase of such first stranger was fraudulent or voidable for any reason, and the second took the title from him with knowledge of the infirmity therein, or of facts sufficient in law to put him upon inquiry as to it, the title is voidable in the hands of the latter.

8. Judicial sales ¶58—Where remote purchaser took land in good faith not knowing infirmity of grantor's title, the title is good.

But, if such first stranger paid a valuable and substantial consideration for the property and took the title, in good faith and without knowledge of such infirmity and of such facts, the title in the hands of his grantee is unimpeachable, even though he had knowledge of facts or circumstances rendering voidable the title of the original purchaser under the decree.

9. Fraudulent conveyances ¶104(1)—Relationship of parties to conveyance, while not proper evidence of fraud, requires scrutinizing of the transaction.

Relationship of the parties to a conveyance of property, contractual and affinitive, assailed on the ground of fraud, is not, strictly and properly, evidence of fraud, but only a circumstance requiring more than ordinary care and scrutiny in the consideration of the evidence and facts and circumstances tending to prove fraud, and according to them more than ordinary probative force.

10. Fraudulent conveyances ¶76(1)—Inadequacy of price alone is insufficient to vitiate conveyance.

Upon an inquiry as to good faith on the part of the parties to a conveyance alleged to have been fraudulent, inadequacy of the price for the property does not alone vitiate it, unless it be so great as to raise a presumption of fraud, or as to make it a circumstance sufficient to have put the purchaser upon inquiry as to the good faith of the vendor.

11. Judicial sales ¶9—In county other than locus does not render sale void.

A sale of real estate made in a county other than that in which it is situated, in conformity with the terms of the decree ordering it, and requiring it to be sold in the county in which the court entering it sat, and afterwards confirmed, in the absence of a statute requiring it to be made in the county of the locus of the property, is not void by reason of the place of sale; the decree being merely erroneous in respect thereof.

12. Divorce ¶244—Court may decree sale of land in another county to enforce wife's right to alimony and suit money.

A court of equity has jurisdiction and power, in a suit for divorce, to decree its allowance of alimony and suit money to be a lien upon the real estate of the defendant and subject the same to sale for satisfaction thereof; and, it may properly do so, in the absence of other means of enforcement of the wife's right to such relief against him, even though the property is situated in a county other than that in which the suit is pending.

13. Taxation ¶848—Title to property sold under decree, taxed to and taxes paid by former owner, is not forfeited for nontaxation as such to purchaser.

The title to property sold under a decree of a court having jurisdiction, occupied after sale and deed by the former owner, and persons claiming under him, taxed in their names and the taxes paid, and not taxed in the name of the purchaser at the judicial sale, is not forfeited for nontaxation as to such purchaser, only one title being involved in the conflicting claims of right, and the taxes having been paid on it.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wood County.

Suit by I. Earl Foggin against H. R. Furbee revived upon his death against Sarah J. Furbee, his executrix, and others. From a decree of perpetual injunction, defendants appeal. Decree reversed, injunction dissolved, and bill and amended bill dismissed.

Reese Blizzard, R. E. Bills, and C. M. Hanna, all of Parkersburg, for appellants.

William Beard, of Parkersburg, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, J. The subject of complaint on this appeal is a decree perpetually enjoining the prosecution of an action of ejectment, commenced in the circuit court of Wood county, against the plaintiff and appellee herein, by H. R. Furbee in his lifetime. While this suit was pending, Furbee died, and it was revived against the executrix of his will and his legatees and devisees.

The subject-matter of the litigation is lot No. 64 of Stewart's Second addition to the city of Parkersburg, together with the dwelling house and other improvements thereon. In a divorce suit instituted and prosecuted to a final decree in the intermediate court of Marion county this property was twice judicially sold and conveyed, and Furbee claims the title mediately under the first of the two sales. Under the second, made after the first had been set aside by proceedings in the same cause, the plaintiff in this suit, I. Earl Foggin, became the purchaser and obtained a deed for the property.

The theory of the decree complained of is that Furbee was a pendente lite purchaser of the property, and, though not made a party to the cause in which it was sold, he was not entitled to a judicial hearing respecting his claim of title. It also proceeds upon the theory of loss of such title as he had by forfeiture for nonentry of the property for taxation and nonpayment of taxes thereon for a period of more than five years, occurring within the pendency of this suit. During that period the plaintiff in this cause was in the actual possession of the property and paid the taxes thereon, and upon these facts he bases his claim of transfer to himself, by virtue of the statute, of such title as Furbee had.

As has been suggested, this controversy has grown out of proceedings in a divorce suit in the intermediate court of Marion county. Within a month or two after his marriage Ernest M. Foggin, residing in Marired to should have commenced on the 14th of August instead of on the 1st of September. It is significant that while both Shoupe and Wheeler testify that there was a positive understanding and agreement, after negotiations, as to the date at which the lease should commence, Harmison on cross-examination says he does not think there was any definite time agreed upon; that there might have been, but he will not be positive about it.

[1, 2] That equity has jurisdiction to reform a contract because of a mutual mistake is not questioned, nor can there be any question that when such reformation is resisted the evidence to justify the same must be clear, convincing and satisfactory. When, however, the evidence is of that character a court of equity will not hesitate to reform a contract and make it speak the real agreement of the parties. The fact that one of the parties denies the right of reformation will not defeat relief, for it may be said as a general rule that if all of the parties were agreed upon this question there would be no litigation. Such a controversy arises as a rule upon the refusal of one of the parties to submit to any change in the contract as written. As above indicated, the oral evidence of Shoupe and Wheeler is clear, positive, and direct that the term was to begin on the 1st of September, 1907, while the testimony of Harmison, when directed to their negotiations upon this particular question, is simply that he does not recollect. If the case depended solely upon the oral testimony, it seems to us that it meets the requirements of the law, but in addition to this oral testimony there is another element which in our judgment is conclusive in favor of the plaintiffs. The receipts introduced in evidence show upon their face that the parties treated the rental years as beginning on the 1st of September, and ending upon the 1st day of the following September. Why would Harmison have put such language in a receipt for the rents if that was not the agreement of the parties? And it is significant that even after this controversy arose Harmison's counsel, in a letter dated August 21, 1917, in referring to a check sent by the plaintiffs to Harmison, uses this significant language:

"I presume you mean this check to pay for the lease of F. L. Harmison to W. W. Hanly, J. C. Shoupe and George R. Wheeler for the years 1916-17, viz., to September 1, 1917."

It seems that the parties were so impressed with the fact that the lease began on the 1st of September that even after the controversy arose Harmison's counsel expressed this view as above indicated. The evidence in this case upon the part of the plaintiffs is of that clear, positive, and direct character

required for the reformation of a contract, and it is met only by the equivocal statements of the defendant. Of course, the written contract is presumably correct. The parties have executed it, and there is a very strong presumption that all of their pertinent prior negotiations are correctly embodied in it. This presumption, however, as before stated, may be rebutted, but because of the peculiar weight to which written contracts are entitled between the parties, the evidence to do so must satisfy the court that a mistake has been made. When this character of evidence is produced and the court is fully satisfied that one of the parties is being deprived of a substantial right because of such a mistake, it will not hesitate to grant relief by way of reformation. Melott v. West, 76 W. Va. 739, 86 S. E. 759.

In this case the evidence convinces us that the plaintiffs are right in their contention, and we will therefore reverse the decree of the court below, reinstate and perpetuate the temporary injunction, and enter a decree here, reforming the contract of lease so as to make the term begin on the 1st of September, 1907, and requiring the defendant Harmison to execute a renewal of said lease for an additional term of 10 years, beginning on the 1st of September, 1917, and remand the cause for the purpose of executing this part of the decree by a commissioner of the court, should the defendant fail or refuse to execute and deliver such renewal, with costs to the plaintiffs in this court and in the court below.

COOK POTTERY CO. v. J. H. PARKER & SON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 13, 1921. Rehearing Denied
Dec. 9, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Patents ⇐182—Party may license use of invention pending application for letters patent.

A license to use an invention, for which proper application for letters patent has been filed, may be given before the patent has been granted, and, if acted upon by applying the invention in the manufacture of articles, will avail to protect the licensee in its use afterwards.

2. Patents ⇐182—Applicant may license use of invention under contract which will protect licensee after issue of patent.

One who has applied for letters patent on a useful invention has an inchoate right of property in such invention on which he can base a contract with another person for license to that other person to use the invention in the manufacture of articles of commerce pending the application for letters patent, and whereby the licensee will be protected in such manufacture after the patent is formally granted.

3. Patents §216—Protection of licensee to use of invention after patent forms a part of consideration for license issued prior to patent.

A license to use an invention, pending the application for letters patent thereon, is sufficient consideration for a contract between the inventor and the licensee whereby articles of commerce may be manufactured by the licensee and placed upon the market on a royalty basis to the inventor. The protection of the licensee in the use of the invention when patented enters into and forms a part of the consideration for such contract. Benefits to be derived by each party to a contract furnish a sufficient consideration for it.

4. Patents §216—Contract held valid and to support plea of set-off.

A special plea of set-off embodying such contract should be permitted to be filed in a case in which the damages accruing by a breach of such contract is a proper set-off to the obligation sued upon; the objection to the plea being that the contract is void for want of consideration.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

5. Contracts §67—Insolvents' agreement that claim should not be discharged through bankruptcy held a consideration for contract.

Where defendants were about to pass through bankruptcy when creditors would receive nothing, the saving of plaintiff's claim was a sufficient consideration for the continuation of an agreement between the parties.

6. Appeal and error §1099(1)—Matters which are or might have been passed on are concluded.

Whatever is contained in the record on appeal is supposed to have been passed on, and whatever is passed on or might have been passed on in consideration of the record is concluded and settled, and is the law of the case.

7. Contracts §176(10), 213(1)—Where time not fixed a reasonable time is understood, and may be fixed by the court and jury.

Where a contract under which one-half of commissions to be paid by plaintiffs should be applied on debts owing from the defendant contained no definite agreement as to its termination, it was not invalid for such reason, a reasonable time being contemplated, and what would be a reasonable time was for the court and jury under the circumstances.

Case Certified from Circuit Court, Wood County.

Action by the Cook Pottery Company against J. H. Parker & Son. Demurrers to special pleadings of set-off and objections to notice of recoupment filed by defendants overruled by the court, which refused to strike out the same, and certified the case for review. Affirmed.

C. D. Merrick, of Parkersburg, for plaintiff.

H. P. Camden and Marshall & Forrer, all of Parkersburg, for defendant.

LIVELY, J. The action of the circuit court in overruling demurrers to two special pleas of set-off, and in overruling objections of the plaintiff to the notice of recoupment filed by the defendants, and in refusing to strike the same out, has been certified to this court for review. The case was before this court on somewhat similar questions raised by this record, and is reported as Pottery Co. v. Parker, 86 W. Va. 580, 104 S. E. 51.

Plaintiff sued defendants on certain notes aggregating $5,170, and defendants tendered two special pleas of set-off designated as special plea No. 1 and special plea No. 2, and a notice of recoupment. The circuit court refused to permit either of the special pleas or the notice of recoupment to be filed, and that action and holding was formerly certified to this court, and it was held here that special plea No. 1 and the notice of recoupment should have been permitted to be filed, thus reversing the circuit court; but the action of the lower court in rejecting special plea No. 2 was affirmed, as will be seen from an inspection of the reported case above referred to.

Now defendants have tendered two more special pleas of set-off designated as special pleas No. 3 and No. 4, respectively, and also another notice of recoupment marked No. 2, both of which special pleas and the notice of recoupment No. 2 were permitted to be filed, and demurrers of the plaintiff thereto and motion to strike out overruled and refused. It is this disposition of the pleas and notice by the circuit court which is now here for review. In plea No. 1, heretofore held to be proper and directed to be filed, the defendants relied on a contract between them and plaintiff, made the 8th of October, 1915, whereby, in consideration of the defendants agreeing to permit plaintiffs to manufacture the "Wedge knob," with the use, in the manufacture thereof, of the "Nailit knob," a device then "owned and controlled" by defendants, the plaintiff agreed to manufacture and sell exclusively to defendants the "Wedge knob" at the price of $5.65 per 1,000, plus a stipulated price for tennypenny nails and leather washers used in the manufacture; and that the plaintiff was to add to the price aforesaid 24 cents per 1,000 to be credited on the books of the plaintiff in reduction of indebtedness of the defendants to plaintiff; and that said agreement was to continue for 5 years, and as long thereafter title depends upon issues of fact, and they are found in favor of the plaintiff in the law action, the defendant therein has no title to be cleared.

As the original bill in this cause disclosed nothing more than clouds on the plaintiff's alleged title, by its allegations and claims, the demurrers to it were improperly overruled. But there is a replication to the answer of the defendants, in which there are allegations of collusion and fraud on the part of the special commissioner, Marie E. Foggin, Shriver, and Furbee, which if true, made the conveyance fraudulent in law if not in fact. These matters were brought into the cause in a very irregular and unusual way. They should have been set up by an amendment to the bill. However in our practice form is generally disregarded and pleadings treated and dealt with according to their substance. As these matters are in the pleadings under an erroneous designation and in bad form, they may be deemed, nevertheless, to have been brought in by way of amendment, and they were evidently so regarded by the trial court. In part the decree stands on them, and the evidence was taken as if they were part of the plaintiff's bill. The defect in the bill has thus been cured, if these allegations, taken in connection with the original bill, make out a good cause of action.

[3, 6-7] In our opinion, the bill, treated as having been so amended, discloses only an equity in the plaintiff of which he could not avail himself in the action at law. Although the decree under which the first sale was made was reversed and vacated in so far as it ordered the sale and the sale set aside, the legal title had been conveyed to Marie E. Foggin and then passed successively from her to Shriver and Furbee. Shriver was not a pendente lite purchaser, because he bought after final decree and before the proceeding for reversal was commenced in any way. Perkins v. Pfalzgraff, 60 W. Va. 137, 53 S. E. 913; Dunfee v. Ohlids, 59 W. Va. 226, 53 S. E. 209. Though having had the legal title and having passed it to Furbee before the decree was reversed neither of them was made a party to the procedure for reversal. No matter whether Shriver acquired the title in good faith or not, he had the legal title, and Furbee acquired it from him, not from any party to the suit. In correcting its errors, on the motion for reversal, the court did not attempt to effect any restitution of title or rights, nor was it asked to do so. The notice to reverse was not served on either Shriver or Furbee to whom the legal title had passed, however much it may have been affected with equities in favor of Ernest Foggin and others claiming under him. The purchaser under the second sale obviously did not acquire the legal title. He acquired only a semblance of such title together with an equity against Furbee, if the allegations of the bill and informal amendment are true. Having no defense to the action of ejectment, available in a court of law, but having superior right in equity, the plaintiff herein could resort to equity to acquire the legal title and enjoin the action at law.

[4] Obviously Furbee's purchase is not within the rule of lis pendens. That rule is very rigid and harsh when it applies. Being so, its limitations are equally rigid and sometimes arbitrary. One of them is that the purchase must have been made from a party to the litigation. French v. Successors of Loyal Co., 5 Leigh. 680; Carr v. Callaghan, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 365; Macey v. Fenwick's Adm'r, 9 Dana (Ky.) 198. Shriver was in no sense a party to any suit at the time of his conveyance to Furbee, nor, having purchased after final decree, was he a purchaser from a party to a pending suit.

It does not follow, however, that the title he acquired may not be affected with an equity in favor of the plaintiff, arising out of actual knowledge of facts creating such an equity. If Marie E. Foggin's purchase was merely pretended and fraudulent and Shriver took her title with knowledge of the fraud and Furbee took it from him with knowledge of its infirmity, the plaintiff, succeeding to the right of Ernest Foggin, is no doubt entitled to have both deeds set aside. There are few, if any, exceptions to the rule that one who purchases property with notice of an equitable right of another in it cannot sustain his purchase as against the claims of such other person. To prevail he must have purchased for value, in good faith, and without notice of the outstanding legal or equitable right.

[9, 10] There is no direct proof of knowledge on the part of Shriver, at the time of his purchase, that Marie E. Foggin had not paid the purchase money, nor that she was not a purchaser in good faith. She had no money with which to buy the property and in fact did not pay the purchase price in money. As she was the sole creditor represented in the suit and her lien exceeded the sum she agreed to pay, the commissioner reported it as having been paid and brought into court. It may have been treated as having been paid and disbursed to her, though the report does not say so. Then her attorney, after having conveyed the property to her as special commissioner, and procured recognition of her title by the Foggins and their agreement to pay her rent as her tenants, found a purchaser of it for her in the person of his brother-in-law, Shriver, whose check in payment of the contract price, $310, payable to her attorney, has been produced and filed as evidence. The price thus paid, as well as the amount of her bid, $210, was inadequate, but this fact as well as the relations of the parties, contractual and otherwise, are mere circumstances to be considered. The relations subsisting among them are not evidence of fraud. They merely call for more careful and scrupulous consideration of facts and circumstances tending to prove fraud, and give unusual probative force to such facts and circumstances. Farmers' Transportation Co. v. Swaney, 48 W. Va. 272, 37 S. E. 592; Lively v. Winton, 30 W. Va. 554, 4 S. E. 451; Knight v. Capito, 23 W. Va. 639; Moore v. Tearney, 62 W. Va. 72, 82, 57 S. E. 263. Looking to the other circumstances, it is found that the purchaser at the judicial sale had no money with which to buy, but had a decreed lien on the property for more than twice the amount of her bid; that the report of the sale inaccurately or falsely stated she had paid the purchase money, and it was in the hands of the commissioner; that she owed the commissioner a fee she could only pay by a sale of the land; that the price she had agreed to pay was much less than the value of the property; that, as soon as she obtained her deed and recognition of her title by the occupants of the property, she conveyed it to Shriver, in consideration of a sum less than its value; that the check of the purchaser was made payable to her attorney; and that the attorney induced the purchaser to buy the property. But there is no proof that Shriver knew any of these facts, except the last three. They fall far short of proof that the commissioner purchased the property from himself, merely using his client and his brother-in-law as trustees, and, in their names, concealing his real transaction. It cannot be inferred from the mere circumstances of relationship and procurement of the sale that he furnished Shriver the money he paid to Marie E. Fogg, nor that Shriver had any knowledge of the true state of the title. Nor is there any proof that Shriver knew the price paid for the property at the judicial sale. We express no opinion as to whether, upon the facts admitted, the commissioner was the real purchaser of the property, or whether Marie E. Fogg acted in good faith. It suffices for our purpose to say Shriver is not shown to have known what had occurred between those parties.

The bill charging fraud was taken for confessed as to Shriver; he not having appeared to it or made any defense. His admission thus made, however, cannot affect the title of Furbee, whose answer denied, for Shriver as well as himself, all charges of collusion, fraud, and knowledge of facts sufficient to put them, or either of them, upon inquiry as to any equities against Marie E. Fogg and her attorney. Subsequent declarations or admissions of a grantor in a conveyance assailed on the ground of fraud are generally inadmissible. Colston v. Miller, 55 W. Va. 490, 494, 47 S. E. 268. Nothing exceptional is perceived in this case upon which it can be excluded from the operation of the general rule.

To acquire and maintain the status of bona fide purchaser, one must pay a valuable consideration. This Shriver did. What he paid, however, evidently was not the full value of the property. It is sometimes said the price paid must be a fair one. Lohr v. George, 65 W. Va. 241, 248, 64 S. E. 609; Speidel Grocery Co. v. Stark & Co., 62 W. Va. 512, 59 S. E. 498. This expression found in these and other cases can hardly be considered as anything more than a dictum since in none of them was sufficiency of the amount of the consideration involved or passed upon. By the great weight of authority it suffices that the payment is substantial, and not so inadequate as to shock the conscience and thus raise an inference of fraud. 27 R. C. L. p. 659; Beebe Stave Co. v. Austin, 92 Ark. 248, 122 S. W. 482, 135 Am. St. Rep. 172; Booker v. Booker, 208 Ill. 529, 70 N. E. 709, 100 Am. St. Rep. 250; Koch v. West, 118 Iowa, 468, 92 N. W. 663, 96 Am. St. Rep. 394; Ennis v. Tucker, 78 Kan. 55, 96 Pac. 140, 130 Am. St. Rep. 352; Strong v. Whybark, 204 Mo. 341, 102 S. W. 968, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 240, 120 Am. St. Rep. 710; Easthan v. Hunter, 102 Tex. 145, 114 S. W. 97, 132 Am. St. Rep. 854; Bassett v. Nosworthy, 2 White & T. Leading Cases (7th Ed.) 130. In the case last cited Lord Keeper Finch said:

"The question is not whether the consideration be adequate, but whether it be valuable."

If it is so inadequate, however, as to suggest fraud, the inadequacy is evidence of lack of good faith. The offer to take a grossly inadequate price suffices to put the purchaser upon inquiry as to whether the title is perfect. 27 R. C. L. p. 712. Under our decisions, inadequacy of price does not prove fraud, unless it is very gross. Half the estimated value of property is not such inadequacy. Lallance v. Fisher, 29 W. Va. 512, 521, 2 S. E. 775; Bradford v. McConihay, 15 W. Va. 732. Shriver is not shown to have known anything about the property in question beyond what he may have been told by the seller and what was indicated by the lease. He resided at a great distance from it and likely had never seen it. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said that the price he paid suggests fraud in his purchase.

[8] It is unnecessary to inquire whether knowledge on Shriver's part of the error for which the first sale was set aside would have precluded right in him to purchase, for there is no proof of such knowledge. Having purchased after final decree in the cause, sale of the property and confirmation of the sale without notice of any fraud or any equity affecting the title of his vendor, and paid a valuable and substantial consideration, he was a bona fide purchaser, and acquired indefeasible title, unless for some reason the sale was coram non judice.

[11, 12] Barring invalidity for lack of jurisdiction in the court, he could pass such title to Furbee, even though the latter may have known Marie E. Foggin's purchase was not made in good faith. King v. Porter, 69 W. Va. 80, 84, 71 S. E. 202; Curtis v. Lunn, 6 Munf. (Va.) 42.

The error for which the decree of sale was reversed in part was not an act in excess of the court's jurisdiction. Of course, the sale should have been made in the county in which the property was, to the end that it might bring as nearly its true value as possible, and authorization of a sale thereof in another county was a palpable error. But jurisdiction is not in all cases limited to the county in which the court sits. In a proper manner and in proper cases, it can sell land in another county, and nothing in the statute expressly inhibits the making of a sale of land situated in one county in another county in which the court sits. Such a sale is not like that of land situated beyond the territorial limits of the state, to which the court's jurisdiction could not extend under any circumstances. Authorization of the making of the sale in Marion county was therefore a mere error in the exercise of jurisdiction. 16 R. C. L. p. 47; 24 Cyc. p. 23.

Nor was it beyond the power of the intermediate court of Marion county, in the divorce suit, to charge the alimony and suit money allowed the plaintiff therein, upon the property of the defendant, situated in Wood county, as a lien, and decree a sale thereof to satisfy it. The jurisdiction is vested by section 11, c. 64, of the Code (sec. 3846), empowering the court, on decreeing a divorce, to make "such further decree as it shall deem expedient, concerning the estate and maintenance of the parties." Goff v. Goff, 60 W. Va. 9, 53 S. E. 769, 9 Ann. Cas. 1083; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 68 W. Va. 15, 69 S. E. 381, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 889; Crowder v. Crowder, 125 Va. 80, 99 S. E. 748. If it were not so provided, it would often be within the power of a faithless husband wholly to defeat the wife's right to alimony.

[13] There is nothing in the contention that the Furbee title has been forfeited by reason of nontaxation and transferred to the plaintiff. Both parties claim the same title, the Ernest Foggin title, and the property has been taxed every year in the name of one of the claimants. State v. West Branch Lumber Co., 64 W. Va. 673, 677, 63 S. E. 372; Lynch v. Andrews, 25 W. Va. 751; Sturm v. Fleming, 26 W. Va. 54; Bradley v. Ewart, 18 W. Va. 598; Lohrs v. Miller, 12 Grat. (Va.) 452.

From these principles and conclusions it results that the decree complained of must be reversed, the injunction dissolved, and the bill and amended bill dismissed.

DONNALLY v. PAYNE, Director General of Railroads. (No. 4354.)*

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Nov. 8, 1921.)

1. Carriers §325—Passenger's doing act ordinarily constituting contributory negligence may not bar recovery where induced by carrier.

A passenger may take a position or do an act resulting in injury to him, upon invitation or inducement of the carrier, or in consequence of constraining influence imposed upon him by it, however effected or evidenced, which, if done in the absence of such circumstances, would make him guilty of negligence or contributory negligence barring right of recovery, without incurring such negligence or contributory negligence, provided the position so taken or act so done involves no greater risk or hazard than an ordinarily prudent man would assume under the circumstances.

2. Carriers §347(1)—Where passenger assumed reasonable risk at carrier's invitation, negligence or contributory negligence is for jury.

If, upon the trial of a case involving such an issue, the evidence tends to prove such invitation, inducement, or constraint and reasonableness of the risk, the passenger is not guilty of negligence or contributory negligence as matter of law, and the issue as to such guilt properly goes to the jury for determination.

3. Carriers §347(9)—Passenger held not contributorily negligent as matter of law in the way he attempted to leave train.

A passenger on a train consisting of several vestibule coaches, carrying workmen as passengers and so crowded as to render progress through the aisles slow and difficult, does not, as matter of law, incur such guilt by reason of his having endeavored to leave the train at his destination, through the arch of the vestibule and the space between the coach and the tender, using the endsill of the tender, constituting a footing or ledge about eight or ten inches wide, on finding the vestibule door closed, if the evidence tends to prove that passengers were accustomed to use all the doors of the coaches as exits, that, on entering the car by the door next to the engine, he took the nearest seat to it, with intent to use it in alighting, that no rule regulating the method of leaving the train was promulgated, that the allowance of time for alighting was customarily insufficient to enable passengers to leave the train in an orderly and careful manner, that the door giving access to the vestibule from the car was open or unlocked and the vestibule arch unobstructed, that other passengers on previous occasions had safely left the train in the way in which he attempted to do so, and that he would have succeeded but for the starting of the train while he was so engaged, and before all other passengers had alighted; and the issue as to right of recovery for an injury sustained in such an attempt properly goes to the jury for determination.

*Rehearing denied January 12, 1922.

Error to Circuit Court, Kanawha County.

Action by Wirt W. Donnally, administrator of the estate of Joel H. Meadors, deceased, against John Barton Payne, Director General of Railroads of the United States, for damages for wrongful death of plaintiff's intestate. A verdict for plaintiff was set aside, and judgment rendered for the defendant, and the plaintiff brings error. Reversed, verdict reinstated, and judgment on the verdict for the plaintiff.

A. A. Lilly and J. E. Brown, both of Charleston, for plaintiff in error.

Leroy Allebach, of Charleston, and W. N. King, of Columbus, Ohio, for defendant in error.

POFFENBARGER, J. Joel H. Meadors, in alighting from a train of the Kanawha & Michigan Railway Company at Sattes station on the night of October 25, 1918, as a passenger and in an unusual manner, fell between the first coach of the train and the tender, and was killed, after having been dragged or carried along for a distance of 40 to 80 feet. In this action by his administrator against the Director General of Railroads for recovery of damages for alleged wrongful death, the jury found a verdict in his favor for $10,000, which the trial court set aside, as being unsustained by the evidence, and then entered a judgment of nil capiat. Of that judgment and the setting aside of the verdict complaint is made on this writ of error. The case went to the jury, upon admittedly correct instructions given at the request of the defendant, and without instructions on behalf of the plaintiff; and no rulings upon the admission and rejection of evidence are complained of. The sole inquiry, therefore, is whether the verdict is contrary to the law and the evidence.

The train by which the fatal injury was inflicted carried officials and employees from Charleston, Dunbar, St. Albans, and other places along the line of the road to the government munitions plant at Nitro. There is no disclosure in the record of the number of trains employed in such service, but great crowds of people were transported to and from that point daily. This train was known as No. 8, and evidently made several trips a day. On this occasion it consisted of four vestibuled coaches, left Nitro at 12:20 a. m., and carried 252 passengers, a sufficient number, according to the evidence, to fill all seats and practically all of the standing room. The cars were so badly crowded that progress through the aisles was slow and difficult.

The train carried no mail, baggage, nor express cars. The passenger coaches extended to the tender. Meadors was in the first coach, and had entered it at the front door thereof and taken the first seat at that end of the car. When the train stopped at Sat-tes, a station two or three miles from Nitro, he attempted to leave the car by the door through which he had entered it. Finding it closed, and either not knowing how to open it or being unwilling to lose the time required in the opening of it, he stepped from the vestibule on the bumper of the tender, or ledge formed by the endsill of the tender, about eight or ten inches wide, and endeavored to follow it out to the side of the tender and alight from it. While standing in this narrow space, with his left hand on the top of the tender, he called for a light. A friend on the platform turned an electric flash light on him, and apparently he would have attained a safe position by another step, had not the engine then started with a lurch which caused him to fall. As soon as he fell, he gave expression to his distress at the top of his voice and continued to do so, until he had been carried or dragged to a public road crossing, distant about 75 feet from the point at which he fell. There it seems he was crushed by contact with the boards of which the crossing was constructed. At that point blood was found and beyond it parts of his clothing. His mangled body was found up the track about a quarter of a mile.

Although other passengers who had gotten off made frantic efforts to attract the attention of the engineer and other train men and get the train stopped, by yelling and signaling with flash lights and otherwise, they were unable to do so, and all of the train crew deny all knowledge of the tragedy until they reached Charleston, and some of them say they knew nothing about it until the next day. The circumstances strongly tend to prove he would have escaped death and serious injury if the engineer had understood and heeded the cries and signals; and some of the witnesses say the alarms were of such character and so close that he must or should have understood them. They admit, however, that yelling and cheering from passengers alighting at that point and racing to the ferry to get to their homes and lodgings at St. Albans was usual and customary. But, as insisted by the witnesses and in the argument, the alarms on this occasion were different from the noises and confusion ordinarily incident to the detraining at that point.

[1] Under our decisions, the failure, if any, of the train to stop long enough to permit the decedent to leave it by the usual exits did not justify the hazardous attempt he made to do so by means of the space between the coach and the tender, unless peculiar circumstances take the case out of the general rule. It amounts in law to contributory negligence barring recovery. Hoylman v. Kanawha & Michigan Railway Co., 65 W. Va. 264, 64 S. E. 536, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 741, 17 Ann. Cas. 1149; Booth v. Camden Int. Railway Co., 68 W. Va. 674, 70 S. E. 559; Farley

v. N. & W. Ry. Co., 67 W. Va. 350, 67 S. E. 1116, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1111. This rule is predicated upon normal conditions. It by no means precludes right of recovery in all cases of injury sustained in alighting from moving trains or choice of unusual means of exit. It applies in the absence of circumstances compelling, inducing, or sanctioning the act ordinarily held to be negligent. The general principles of the law of negligence are not dependent upon particular facts or situations. They are just as applicable to the relation of the parties in debarkation as in that of carriage. A passenger may assume risks made necessary or induced by the conduct of the carrier. Ordinarily, a passenger riding on the platform of a car is negligent and cannot recover, if injury proximately results from such act. But he may recover in such case, if the crowded condition of the train rendered the act reasonably necessary. Norvell v. Kanawha & Michigan Ry. Co., 67 W. Va. 467, 68 S. E. 288, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 325. There are many instances in which the overloading or overcrowding of cars, trains, and other vehicles has been held to be sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the carrier to carry the issue to the jury as to whether the passenger was excusable in the assumption of a position or resort to conduct that, under ordinary conditions, would have constituted negligence as matter of law, barring right of recovery. 4 R. C. L. §§ 635, 636. The same doctrine applies to conduct on the part of a carrier, inducing a passenger to attempt to alight from the car in a dangerous place. Cartwright v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 52 Mich. 606, 18 N. W. 380, 50 Am. Rep. 274. In that case the learned Judge Cooley said:

"But we think a woman is excusable for not desiring to pass through the smoking car, and she has a right to assume it is not expected of her. We also think that passengers, where not notified to the contrary, may rightfully assume that it is safe to alight from the car wherever it is stopped for passengers to leave it. And if no light is given them to leave the car by, they are not to be charged with fault for leaving in the darkness."

such guilt. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Lang's Adm'r, 100 Ky. 221, 38 S. W. 503, 40 S. W. 451, 41 S. W. 271. Under such circumstances, a passenger is excusable in sitting on a car step. Devine v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 177 Ill. App. 860. A negro passenger is excusable in standing on the car platform if there is no room for him in the colored compartment though there is room in the other to which he is not allowed access. International & Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Williams, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 587, 50 S. W. 732. The doctrine of justification by reasonable necessity, in taking a dangerous position on a train, extends to declination on the part of a male passenger to crowd his way to a place of safety, to the exclusion of ladies, in case of lack of room. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Fisher, 141 Ill. 614, 31 N. E. 406. Whether a person was guilty of negligence in not going inside of a street car where there was unoccupied space is a question of fact for the jury, where the evidence shows there were about 18 persons in the vestibule and on the steps, who obstructed passage into the car. Petersen v. Elgin, etc., Traction Co., 238 Ill. 408, 87 N. E. 345. For additional decisions illustrating the principle, see 10 O. J. 1145, 1146.

These decisions and numerous others of their classes seem to proceed upon about three different principles, namely: Legal right in the citizen to have carriage, upon compliance with the conditions legally imposed upon him, by such means and facilities as the carrier has furnished, even though they may not be reasonably safe; legal right to observe and obey directions of the servants and agents of the carrier, or to act and rely upon inducements held out by them; and right to immunity from circumstances and conditions imposed or permitted by the carrier, which influence or affect his judgment and discretion or deprive him of opportunity for free and deliberate exercise thereof, in so far as he is required to rely upon them. The first is analogous to the right of a citizen respecting the use of a highway. Even though he knows it to be in an unsafe condition and that use of it is hazardous, he may nevertheless assume the risk, without prejudice to his right, provided he exercises care in the use thereof and it is necessary for him to make use of it. Shriver v. County Court, 66 W. Va. 685, 66 S. E. 1062, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 377. The other two have their foundation in the high degree of care and duty a common carrier owes to its passenger. It is bound not only to furnish safe and suitable vehicles, machinery, and appliances, but also to protect him from injury by others, as far as it is reasonably possible to do so, and to abstain from all acts and conduct on its own part and that of its officers, agents, and servants that may occasion injury to him in any way.

[2] There is an obvious difference, however, between the assumption, upon necessity or by inducement, of a known risk or hazard, and the incurrence of certain and inevitable injury. For the latter there is perhaps no justification, except in the case of sudden peril depriving the endangered person, whether a passenger, servant, traveler, or other individual, of opportunity for deliberate judgment or prudent action. In the determination of the question whether to board a train or alight from it, by a person standing in a safe place and influenced by nothing more than fear of being left or carried past his station, that element probably cannot enter. Likely only danger of death or injury excuses an error of judgment. Hence a passenger probably cannot put himself in a situation that no reasonable or prudent person would take in order to obtain passage on a train, or to prevent carriage beyond his station. But in such case, upon reasonable necessity or by inducement of the carrier, effected in any way, he may assume such a risk of injury as an ordinarily prudent person would take, without incurring guilt of negligence; wherefore the issue as to negligence or contributory negligence in such cases is ordinarily one for jury determination.

[3] Upon the inquiry as to the effect of the adoption of the unusual means of exit already described by the decedent, it is necessary to say: (1) Whether, under all of the circumstances, the jury could find that his conduct was induced or caused, directly or indirectly, by the carrier; and (2) whether the method adopted was such as the jury could say an ordinarily prudent man would not consider too dangerous to resort to.

The facts and circumstances bearing upon the question of inducement are not very fully developed. Much of the evidence offered for disclosure thereof was rejected. As has been stated, the train was crowded. The stop was very short. The witnesses for the plaintiff say it was not longer than half of a minute or a minute, and circumstances related by them tend to prove a very short stop. According to the testimony of witnesses Howard and Zarnes, the stop was customarily short and allowed but little time for getting off. On this occasion Speece stood on the first or lower step at the rear of the first car. Getting off and hurrying forward, he found Meadors endeavoring to get out through the front door. He says he "ran ahead." Howard, standing on the second step at the front end of the second car, when the train stopped hurried forward, and reached the tender just as Meadors called for a light. He says he "traveled at pretty good speed." All passengers moved rapidly in efforts to get out of the train and to reach the ferry as quickly as possible. Generally there was rivalry among them in reaching the ferry. According to Speece, Meadors did not stop to endeavor to open the door he found closed. He stepped right out of the vestibule on to the ledge at the end of the tender and called for light, which Burlew furnished. Just as it was turned on him, the train started with a lurch and threw him off. That evidently occurred just about the time of the arrival of Howard, who had rapidly walked a little more than 60 feet. Although it was no doubt possible for Meadors to have worked his way to the rear of the car he was in, during the run from Nitro to Sattes, he took a seat at the front of it and remained there until the train stopped, evidently intending from the first to leave the car through the door at that end. He and Speece had entered through the door by which he intended to leave the car. His conduct indicates reliance upon some sort of assurance or his belief that that door would be available to him, and there is evidence tending to prove ground for such belief. Zarnes testified that it was customary for passengers to leave that train in such manner as they saw fit and to use all doors. His words are:

"No certain way they could get out is the only way I could explain it. They came out of the vestibules."

Speece said:

"They most generally get off any place they can, and any way they can; off the front end of the engine, through the windows, or any other way, just to get off before the train starts, to keep from carrying them on through. I have got off that way many a time, down on the tender, before that time, myself."

As to this, there is some contradiction in the evidence. The brakeman testified that the door next to the tender and the one at the rear of the train were never left open, that the passengers were never let out at the head and next to the engine, and that they were always worked through the rear. On the occasion in question he assisted passengers to alight between the third and fourth cars. The conductor did not aid in the discharge of passengers. He thinks he was collecting tickets in the second coach. Passengers got off between the first and second unattended. About 75 got off, only about 15 of whom were attended by the brakeman. There is conflict also as to whether the lattice gate was closed at the front end of the first car, the brakeman saying it was, and other witnesses denying that it was. Contrary to the estimates of plaintiff's witnesses as to the length of the stop, the train register shows two minutes, and the brakeman said he thought it was about two minutes. As the evidence is to be viewed as if it stood upon a demurrer thereto, that of the plaintiff, in the instances of conflict, is to be taken as true, in the absence of something conclusively establishing the contrary. Coalmer

v. Barrett, 61 W. Va. 237, 56 S. E. 385; Buck v. Newberry, 55 W. Va. 681, 47 S. E. 889; State v. Sullivan, 55 W. Va. 597, 47 S. E. 267.

It is perfectly manifest that the jury could find, upon amply sufficient evidence, that the train was crowded; that the car door at the front end of the first car was unlocked, if not indeed open; that the lattice gate at that end of the car was not closed; that the vestibule door at that end of the car had been used for exit as well as entry; that the decedent knew it had; that the circumstances induced belief on his part that he could leave the car by that door; that he took the seat nearest to that door, intending to leave through it; that the train made very short stops in consequence of the rapidity with which the passengers debarked at that station; that the passengers were unduly hurried in alighting by reason of the shortness of the stops at that station; that, finding the door closed and not knowing how to open it, or deeming the time too short to permit opening thereof, he had not time, under the existing conditions, to reach the other end of the car and alight there; and that he was taken by surprise occasioned by the circumstances here related, and influenced or induced by them to take the risk and hazard of exit through the space between the car and the tender.

Authorities herein referred to make it clear that to bring about or permit a situation of that kind is inconsistent with the extremely high duty imposed by the law upon carriers of passengers. A combination of circumstances arising from the manner in which such a carrier conducts its business and influencing or inducing a passenger to assume a risk of injury amounts to an obvious breach of duty to take care of him while in the care of the carrier; abstain from harm to him; protect him from harm by others; provide for safety in his entry, occupation, and exit. The carrier, as his custodian, is guilty of a breach of duty in putting him in a situation which makes it necessary for him to choose between relinquishment of a right and incurrence of a risk of personal injury in the effort to retain it. To say the decedent, in the exercise of unusual caution, should have worked his way to the rear of the coach and thus insured his ability to get off safely, is not a sufficient response to this charge. To exact extreme caution and a high degree of care on the part of a passenger would necessarily involve a corresponding relaxation or abatement of care on the part of the carrier. The relation is reciprocal. Extreme duty rests upon the carrier. Hence the passenger need not be wary. He may rightfully drop into the situation provided for him by his custodian. He may act and rely upon a plainly extended invitation of the carrier, however effected or evidenced. He may yield to reasonable necessity occasioned by the situation made by the carrier, in his effort to obtain and enjoy his right of transportation, and, if in doing so he takes a position which ordinarily would be regarded as dangerous, he is nevertheless faultless in the eye of the law.

In Hoylman v. Kanawha & Michigan Ry. Co., cited, the conditions were normal. The train was not crowded. Ample time for exit was allowed. The passenger did not avail himself of the clear opportunity afforded him. The train was in motion before he reached the door. Nobody was in fault save himself. Before the train started, the conductor looked through the coaches and saw nobody moving toward the doors. It was upon these facts that the court held the passenger guilty of negligence as matter of law. That decision does not fit this case. It was a case involving purely normal conditions. Judge Brannon observed that "there was no crowd." In the authorities he cited exceptions to the rule are recognized. As stated in Walters v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 113 Wis. 367, 89 N. W. 140, one of the cases he cited, the rule is stated thus:

"An adult who [knowingly and] unnecessarily steps from a [railroad] train * * * in motion is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law."

He interpreted Wood on Railroads as saying the question of negligence in such cases is not left to the jury unless there are exceptional circumstances tending to excuse or justify the act. Here we have exceptional circumstances strikingly similar to, though not like, those held in many cases to have tended to excuse or justify conduct that would otherwise have constituted negligence per se. If in the Hoylman Case there had been circumstances tending to prove inducement, invitation, or constraining influence, it would no doubt have been held to be a proper case for the jury. It is not intended here to hold that the decedent was not guilty of negligence. We merely hold that he was not guilty of it as matter of law, and that it was for the jury to say whether he was or not, provided the risk he assumed was not so great that the court would be bound to say no ordinarily prudent man of the age and physical condition of the decedent would have incurred it.

This conclusion is not in conflict with any decision we have found. In Wenzel v. City & Elm Grove R. Co., 64 W. Va. 310, 61 S. E. 1001, there was no proof of the actual cause of the death of the plaintiff's intestate, and it did not clearly appear that the position he took in view of the crowded condition of the electric car on which he was riding exposed him to any peril. Another passenger occupying a like position was not hurt. For all that any person can say from the evidence, he had voluntarily or negligently jumped, slid or fallen from the car. In Railroad Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 439, 24 L. Ed. 506, the decedent had unnecessarily taken a seat on the pilot of the engine; the box car provided for him and his coworkers affording plenty of room for him. Besides, he had been warned against riding on the pilot and forbidden to do so. In Lowry v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 74 W. Va. 791, 82 S. E. 1101, there was not a circumstance tending in the lightest degree to justify the irregular action of the decedent, on the ground of necessity, invitation, or constraint. He made no effort to get off on the side on which provision had been made for him. In getting off irregularly, he followed no precedent. In his case there was no element of surprise induced in any way by the carrier. Besides, he walked into the very jaws of apparent death. He took a risk no prudent man would have taken. Here the thing attempted was feasible, and would have been safely accomplished, but for the starting of the train a second or two earlier than the decedent supposed it would start.

Though an aged man, he was physically strong and active. According to the testimony of Speece and Howard, he would easily have succeeded in his effort but for the starting of the train. From their evidence it is also clear that he acted quickly and energetically. Another second or two of time would have put him beyond danger. The jury could have found that the stop was too short to allow other passengers to get off, and therefore shorter than the usual short stop. Speece testified that people were still getting off as cars passed him. On this question the length of the particular stop, as compared with that of previous stops, may be considered and is forceful. Meadors could rely upon his knowledge of the usual practice. The evidence bearing upon the character of the risk obviously makes it also a question for the jury.

As the verdict is sustained upon this theory, it is clearly unnecessary to enter upon any inquiry as to the sufficiency of other grounds of liability insisted upon.

If the verdict had been properly set aside, there should not have been a judgment of nil capiat.

For the reasons stated, the judgment will be reversed, the verdict reinstated, and a judgment rendered thereon.

LIVELY, J., absent.

MILLER, J. (dissenting). I must decline to concur in the opinion of the court in this case. I do not see how there can be two opinions about the question of fact that decedent was guilty of the grossest negligence and disregard for his own safety, in attempting to alight from the end of the coach where the vestibule doors were closed against him, and by undertaking to leave by the end sill of the tender, a method so manifestly dangerous and unusual as to warn any reasonable man of the great danger in doing so. When he entered, he took a seat near the door, and when the train stopped it took him but a second to discover that that door was closed, which was notice to him not to attempt to leave by that way. No other passenger undertook to do so. Every other passenger destined for Sattes moved in the direction of the rear door of the coach. A passenger who had gone out by the rear door and walked the entire length of the coach saw decedent in the act of trying to open the front door. How long he continued in this before taking his position on the end sill of the tender does not appear. Although the evidence tended to show a car more or less crowded, all got safely to the platform uninjured, except decedent.

The main act of negligence alleged and relied on, was the alleged failure of defendant to stop its train long enough for passengers to alight at Sattes. No trainman saw the decedent in his place of danger. Enough time elapsed for him to get out there in the dark, with no light to guide him, for one witness says he called to him to use a flash light upon him to enable him to see. Assuming that defendant was negligent in not making a longer stop, that fact did not justify the decedent in attempting to leave the coach by a way he knew had been closed against him. It was unnecessary for him to take this desperate chance. The fact that some passengers may have been seen jumping off the rear end of the coach when it passed the place where the front end had stood, argues little. It is most improbable, and no witness swears that the signal to go was given the engineer while passengers were still in the act of alighting from the train at the place where they were invited to alight. If any alighted afterwards, they had loitered or been slow in leaving the train. In Simmons v. Seaboard Air Line Railway, 120 Ga. 225, 47 S. E. 570, 1 Ann. Cas. 777, it was decided, opinion by Lamar, Judge, afterwards an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, that if a person voluntarily assumes a risk, accompanied by some supposed negligence of the carrier, such conduct on his part is not merely contributory negligence, lessening the amount of damages, but a failure to avoid danger, defeating his right to recover anything. In this case Justice Lamar held that, if one has a "clear chance" to avoid a danger, which the evidence in this case shows decedent appreciated, and chooses not to do so, but to risk it, his negligence, not that of defendant, becomes the proximate cause of his injuries, and will defeat any recovery. The doctrine of the Georgia case is settled law everywhere. See 2 Shearman & Redfield on Negligence (6th Ed.) § 519 et seq., and illustrative cases cited.

The liability of a carrier is always conditioned upon the exercise by the passenger of reasonable and proper care and caution for his own safety. Baltimore & Potomac Railroad Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 439, 24 L. Ed. 506. Does it need argument to show that Meadors was lacking in this particular, when he chose the most dangerous method of alighting from the coach? One or two of the counts in the declaration undertook to excuse his negligence by averring that he was old and deaf and that his eye sight was bad; but on the trial this theory was abandoned, and as some justification for his foolhardy act, evidence was introduced as tending to show that though he had passed beyond the time ordinarily allotted to man to live, Meadors was possessed of all his faculties, was agile and active, and therefore was justified in taking the hazardous choice of going out of the car over the end sill of the tender. In the case of Railroad Co. v. Jones, supra, it is held that a passenger will not be justified in taking such a risk, even though he may be invited by the trainman to do so; that in such case his injury must be ascribed to his own recklessness and folly. I see little room for distinguishing this case from Hoylman v. K. & M. Ry. Co., 65 W. Va. 264, 64 S. E. 536, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 741, 17 Ann. Cas. 1149. The mere scintilla of evidence that the railroad company had suffered passengers to leave the train by unusual avenues, as windows, furnished no excuse for passengers to risk their lives in doing so when wholly unwarranted, so as to carry the case to the jury on the question of contributory negligence. Dye v. Corbin, 59 W. Va. 266, 53 S. E. 147; Ketterman v. Dry Fork R. R. Co., 48 W. Va. 606, 614-615, 37 S. E. 683. In Wenzel, Adm'r, v. City & Elm Grove R. R. Co., 64 W. Va. 310, 61 S. E. 1001, we affirmed the judgment below excluding plaintiff's evidence and directing a verdict, where a passenger was seated on the floor of an electric car with his feet on the running board, and was thrown off the car when running at a rapid rate when turning a curve, such running of the car not of itself showing negligence justifying a verdict against the railroad company.

In Lowry v. Balto. & Ohio R. R. Co., 74 W. Va. 791, 82 S. E. 1101, we affirmed the judgment below sustaining defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's evidence, where plaintiff undertook in the daytime to alight from the end of the coach where no platform was provided, instead of the place where the other passengers were invited to alight; this upon the principle that it is the duty of a passenger to use his senses and use the way provided for alighting, and not to attempt to alight by ways obviously dangerous. In that case we cited with approval Norfolk & Western Railway Co. v. Hawkes, 102 Va. 452, 46 S. E. 471, holding that the law imposes no such obligation on railways to one injured by his own negligence, against which common prudence would have protected him, and that it was immaterial that he thought he was in a place of safety.

I do not find it convenient to elaborate an opinion on the subject, and besides, a dissenting opinion is generally a work of supererogation and quite uninteresting; but this much I feel constrained to say in protest against the decision. I think the judgment below was clearly right and ought to be affirmed.

NUTTALLBURG SMOKELESS FUEL CO.
v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF HARRISVILLE et al. (two cases).

SAME v. PULLMAN STATE BANK et al.

(Nos. 4343-4345.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 8, 1921. Rehearing Denied
Dec. 9, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Process \Leftrightarrow 149—Officer's return indorsed on summons is prima facie evidence of service, and may be overthrown.

Upon a proceeding to vacate a judgment taken by default, in a case in which the defendant had no notice of the pendency of the action in any manner or form, the return of the officer indorsed upon the summons is only prima facie evidence of service, and may be overthrown by proof of such lack of notice.

2. Judgment \Leftrightarrow 420—Bill will lie to vacate default judgment in law action based upon false return.

A bill in equity will lie to vacate a judgment rendered in consequence of such return, upon proper allegations that the return was in fact false, that the person so served was not the president of such corporation, that no notice, actual or constructive, was received by the corporation of the pendency of such action at law, and that the corporation had a just defense to the action at law, and was prevented by such false return from asserting it.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Kanawha County.

Two suits by the Nuttallburg Smokeless Fuel Company against the First National Bank of Harrisville and others, and one by the same plaintiff against the Pullman State Bank and others. Bills dismissed, and the plaintiff appeals. Suits considered together. Decree reversed, demurrer overruled, and remanded in each case.

E. B. Dyer and Morgan Owen, both of Charleston, for appellant.

S. A. Powell, of Harrisville, for appellees.

LIVELY, J. From decrees of the circuit court sustaining demurrers to and dismissing its bills, plaintiff obtained appeals.

The same questions arise in each of these three cases, and they will all be considered together. A discussion of and decision in the Bank of Harrisville Case will dispose of the others.

Plaintiff, a corporation, alleges that defendant, on the 10th of November, 1920, obtained a judgment against it and T. C. Beury for $5,253.45 in an action of debt, in the circuit court of Kanawha county, without any appearance by or knowledge of plaintiff, on certain notes claimed to have been signed by plaintiff, payable to T. C. Beury, and by him indorsed to defendant; that no process was served on plaintiff; and that execution was issued and levied on plaintiff's property. The bill further alleges that on March 9, 1920, T. C. Beury was president of plaintiff corporation, and then issued said notes, payable to himself, and sold and indorsed the same to defendant bank, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff corporation, and received and used the proceeds for his own personal ends, without knowledge of plaintiff; that the defendant bank knew that such notes were not authorized by the corporation; that Beury had no authority to so issue or use them, and that the money derived therefrom was to be used by him for his personal ends. It is charged that the making of the notes was ultra vires, the notes void, and the defendant bank had knowledge of these facts. It is alleged that the judgment was obtained solely on the affidavit filed with the declaration; that the notes were not produced in court; and that a fraud was practiced on the court in obtaining judgment without producing the notes; that, after the notes were so negotiated, and before said suit in debt was begun, the entire stock and assets of plaintiff corporation were sold and transferred to the Ford Motor Company and new directors and a new president of the corporation were elected on July 7, 1920, and that T. C. Beury was not the president of the corporation at the time service of process in said action in debt was served on him as such on the 26th of July, 1920; that no process was served on plaintiff and it knew nothing of said suit until the execution was levied as aforesaid. The bill prayed that the judgment be annulled and declared void as to plaintiff, the sheriff be enjoined from selling under the execution, and for general relief. A demurrer was interposed by the bank and sustained, and the bill dismissed on May 16, 1921.

[1] The return of the sheriff on the summons in debt reads:

"Executed the within process on the within named Nuttleburg Smokeless Fuel Company, a corporation, on the 26 day of July, 1920, by delivering a true copy thereof in writing in Kanawha county, West Virginia, wherein he resides, to Thos. C. Beury, the president of said corporation.

"S. B. Jarrett, S. K. C.,
"By J. H. Windell, D. S. K. C."

This record presents one controlling question: Is the return of the sheriff conclusive, having been served on Beury as president of the corporation, when in fact he was not president and had no connection with the corporation? If the service of process is conclusive, then plaintiff had legal notice of the action in debt, and its defenses of fraud and want of consideration should have been pleaded in that suit, and, if sustained, would have prevented recovery. Prewett v. Bank, 66 W. Va. 184, 66 S. E. 231, 135 Am. St. Rep. 1019. If it was legally summoned, and neglected to set up these defenses, it can receive no relief in equity for its neglect. The decisions of the states of Virginia and West Virginia have held to the common-law doctrine that a sheriff's return of process in a suit is conclusive, if sufficient on its face, and cannot be attacked by parties and privies to the suit. Milling Co. v. Read, 76 W. Va. 557, 85 S. E. 726; Talbott v. Oil Co., 60 W. Va. 423, 55 S. E. 1009; McClung v. McWhorter, 47 W. Va. 151, 34 S. E. 740, 81 Am. St. Rep. 785; Rader v. Adamson, 37 W. Va. 582, 16 S. E. 808; Stewart v. Stewart, 27 W. Va. 167; Bowyer v. Knapp, 15 W. Va. 290; Sutherland v. Bank, 111 Va. 515, 69 S. E. 341, and Virginia cases cited there.

The reason for the rule given in our decisions does not seem to have been examined at length. They recognize it as a harsh rule, but it is said, its harshness is "offset by the great inconvenience that would arise from uncertainty of judicial judgments and decrees." Milling Co. v. Read, supra, 76 W. Va. 569, 85 S. E. 731. In Stewart v. Stewart, supra, it is stated that others besides the defendants are interested that the return should be regarded as true; that rights of property would suffer under any other rule; and that sufficient protection to the injured is conserved by right of action against the officer for false return. In that case the rights of others had intervened. It is asserted there that the rule at common law should be followed, and if it is thought wise to change the rule, the Legislature should furnish the remedy. The evils and great inconvenience which would arise from the uncertainty of judicial judgments and decrees seems to be more imaginative than real. Experience, the great practical test, has demonstrated that no harm to the stability and certainty of judgments and decrees has resulted in the jurisdictions where the common-law rule of verity in the return has been abolished. On the contrary, we hear no challenge or outcry for that reason, or for any other reasons, from the 34 states which have either abolished or modified the verity rule, and the bench and bar of those states seem to be well satisfied. This rule is a heritage from ancient English law, formulated in times and under conditions which have very little resemblance to modern times and affairs; and, like a great many other ancient rules, has been meeting with disapproval in the transition of modern progressive jurisprudence. It has been abandoned by the courts in 21 of the states, by the federal courts, abolished by legislation in six others, and modified materially by the courts in seven other states. Eight states, including West Virginia, yet retain it. Another reason for the rule, not stressed by our decisions, is that the sheriff is a sworn officer to whom the law gives credit, and that he and his bondsmen are liable for damages caused by a false return. It seems somewhat anomalous, in present-day affairs, that the law should give more credit to a statement of the sworn officer in his return than it does in the suit against him for damages for false return. In the latter instance his oath is of no superior sanctity than that of the complainant and his witnesses, and there it becomes a jury question to be decided according to the rules for ascertainment of fact as in other cases. His return is as much of an official act in case of a suit on his bond as when questioned by a plea in abatement in the original suit, or in any other suit between the litigants relating thereto. If the law gives credit in the first instance, it seems logical that it should give the same measure of credit in the other instance, where the exact question is at issue. The remedy on the bond is a confession of the weakness of the verity rule; for it is an admission that the officer might make a false return; that he is not made infallible by being selected and sworn as an officer. The selection of officers by modern election methods is no index of sanctity or infallibility.

When the verity rule was anciently formulated, the sheriff was a high and important officer, the king's own representative, armed with the king's writ, and partaking of the king's fiction that he could do no wrong. He was the king's emissary, rather than the court's officer. When the verity doctrine made its bid to be embodied in judicial procedure, the times were feudal, the sovereigns were supreme, with almost unrestricted powers over life and property. The high sheriff was his agent and executive officer. His acts were, in a sense, the acts of the king, and not to be questioned. Having become adopted and followed for many years, and transmitted to America, it was first followed as a matter of course by many of the states, including Virginia, and a mere statement of the rule seems to have become sufficient for its adoption and continued existence in this state, without consideration of its reasonableness or its adaptability to changed conditions.

It is axiomatic that wherever there is a wrong there is a remedy; and the only remedy imposed under the verity rule, the suit for false return, is illogical and cumbersome when carefully considered. The remedy may be ineffective, as it is within common knowledge that sheriffs often become insolvent, and their bonds exhausted by liabilities. But why limit the injured litigant to this remedy alone? And what is the logical result of such exclusive remedy? A. sues B., and the process is not served on B., but on some other person, but the return says it was on B. The mistake is made innocently by the sheriff, and the return made in good faith. A. obtains judgment and receives money to which he may not be entitled. B. not only suffers by payment of the judgment, but is required to expend time and expense in a suit against the sheriff, which may fall of full or even partial fruition, for reasons above suggested; and, if the sheriff is financially able, he is compelled to pay heavily for any innocent mistake. All of this litigation would have been saved, and the damages minimized, if the mistake could have been shown at the outset, in the original suit, or in a suit between the original parties; and the true facts would more likely be ascertained in such a proceeding than in a suit on the sheriff's bond. Thus the sheriff's liability would be lessened, confined to the expense, if any, of ascertaining and correcting the mistake, and would save a possible miscarriage of justice. The policy of the law is to save a multiplicity of suits. The sheriff is allowed to amend his return to show the true facts; and even the court's record may be corrected, to show the true facts upon strong and impregnable proof, in a proceeding for that purpose. The sheriff's return should not be more sacred than the solemn record of the court. As stated, the courts in the majority of the states have abolished the rule of verity as not consonant with modern procedure, and now permit a direct attack in the same court where the process is returned in the same action, or by procedure to vacate the judgment. Paul v. Malone, 87 Ala. 544, 6 South. 351; Kavanaugh v. Hamilton, 53 Colo. 157, 125 Pac. 512, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 76; Buckingham v. Osborne, 44 Conn. 133 (it seems that Connecticut has never held to the verity doctrine); Hilt v. Heimberger, 235 Ill. 235, 85 N. E. 304; Bowden v. Hadley, 138 Iowa, 711, 116 N. W. 689;

Sloan v. Menard, 5 La. Ann. 218; Taylor v. Welslager, 90 Md. 409, 45 Atl. 476; Lane v. Jones, 94 Mich. 540, 54 N. W. 283; Knutson v. Davies, 51 Minn. 363, 53 N. W. 646; Burke v. Tousley, 56 Ohio St. 450, 47 N. E. 541; Ray v. Harrison, 32 Okl. 17, 121 Pac. 633, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 413; Genobles v. West, 23 S. C. 154; Randall v. Collina, 58 Tex. 231; Ill. Steel Co. v. Dettlaff, 116 Wis. 319, 93 N. W. 14; and Mechanical Appliance Co. v. Castleman, 215 U. S. 437, 30 Sup. Ct. 125, 54 L. Ed. 272 (holding that the state rule that the sheriff's return was conclusive should not be followed by the federal court sitting in that state). See, also, Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. S. 503, 23 L. Ed. 398. In Ray v. Harrison, supra, the Oklahoma court said:

"It is fundamental that a judgment rendered without notice is void, and to make an officer's return, which is false, conclusive evidence against the truth, is not in harmony with reason or justice, and we think the better rule is that, while such a return is prima facie evidence of its truthfulness, and while it requires clear and convincing proof to set it aside, it is the duty of the court, when evidence meets this test, to act upon it, and not permit an established falsehood to stand as true."

Kansas seems to have modified the rule, holding that the return is conclusive as to all facts presumptively within the knowledge of the officer, but prima facie evidence only of facts which he would have to get by inquiry from others. Schott v. Linscott, 80 Kan. 536, 103 Pac. 997. The state of Washington seems to follow the Kansas decisions. Wilbert v. Day, 83 Wash. 390, 145 Pac. 446. See, also, Carr v. Commercial Bank, 16 Wis. 50, where the sheriff's return stated notice served on H. S. D. president, judgment was taken by default, and afterwards vacated upon evidence showing that H. S. D. was not president, or any other officer of the bank at the time of service.

In Arizona, California, Idaho, Utah, Georgia, and Mississippi statutes have been passed declaring the sheriff's return to be prima facie correct, and allowing it to be disputed. In Indiana, Kentucky, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island, the verity rule has been relaxed to an appreciable degree by construction of remedial statutes. Nietert v. Trentman, 104 Ind. 390, 4 N. E. 306; Bramlett v.

McVey, 91 Ky. 151, 15 S. W. 49; Brewer v. Holmes, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 288; Locke v. Locke, 18 R. I. 716, 30 Atl. 422. In Brewer v. Holmes, supra, Chief Justice Shaw said:

"It is said that the petitioner would have a remedy upon the officer for a false return, and, on showing his defense to the first action, recover back from him the amount he had been compelled to pay. Supposing he could, which may be doubted, the result would be that the present respondent, the original plaintiff, would have a sum of money, which, in the case supposed, he had no just claim to recover, and the officer would be compelled to pay a like sum for a slight and perfectly innocent mistake. An officer goes to a house to leave a summons with John Smith; not knowing the person, he is led to believe, without fault of anybody, that his brother James Smith is the man he is looking for, and he leaves the summons with him and makes his return accordingly. This is a false return. If somebody must necessarily suffer loss, in consequence of this mistake, it is no doubt right that it should fall on him who made it. But if it is seasonably discovered in time to prevent loss to anybody, why should not the remedy be applied, and the rights of all parties be saved? The effect of a review will be simply to give the petitioner opportunity to make a defense."

Arkansas has also practically abolished the verity rule. Wells Fargo v. Baker Lumber Co., 107 Ark. 415, 155 S. W. 122.

The courts of Maine, Missouri, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, and West Virginia yet adhere to the verity doctrine. The Pennsylvania court formerly showed indications of breaking away from the ancient doctrine, but recently has affirmed it (three judges dissenting) in Holley v. Travis, 267 Pa. 136, 110 Atl. 230; and in Miller Paper Co. v. Keystone Coal & Coke Co., 267 Pa. 180, 110 Atl. 79. In the latter case the reason is given that the summons is a part of the record of the court, and not subject to attack.

We have directed attention to the decisions of the various states and to legislative action to show that judicial analysis has undermined the reasons anciently given for support of the verity rule, and that the doctrine has been recognized as unsuitable to modern conditions. The discussions are instructive and illuminating. It will be noted that, while our own decisions have followed the verity doctrine, there is but one case, McClung v. McWhorter, 47 W. Va. 151, 34 S. E. 740, 81 Am. St. Rep. 785, where it was not clearly shown that the party complaining had some notice of the pending suit, or failed to show that he had a just defense. We have discountenanced special appearances to quash, where the parties have been served with process or had actual notice. The object of process is to bring the defendant into court where a hearing will be accorded, and not much grace or consideration has been given to one who admitted that he had received actual or constructive notice, but claimed there was some technical defect in the manner of service. Perceiving that no harm had come to him, or that he was in fault and had slept on his rights, we have refused to consider purely technical grounds, and the strict rule has been invoked by its mere statement and without analysis of the reason. In Milling Co. v. Read, supra, defendant averred in his answer in the chancery suit that he had not been served in the suit on the note before the justice, but did not say that he was ignorant of the pendency of the suit, and made no pretense whatever of a defense to the note. In Talbott v. Oil Co., 60 W. Va. 423, 55 S. E. 1009, defendant appeared specially on the trial and averred that process had not been served on it, and then withdrew. Judge Poffenbarger pointed out that "there was notice in point of fact." Defendant "appeared and attempted to take advantage of the mistake of the officer." There the defendant with full notice relied on a technicality. Judge Poffenbarger impliedly questioned the verity doctrine, for after stating it he says: "If this rule is sound," it must apply to judgments by default," etc. (60 W. Va. 425, 55 S. E. 1010). In Rader v. Adamson, 37 W. Va. 595, 13 S. E. 808, the process was served by an individual who made oath to the service, and the question of verity seems not to have been passed upon, reference being made to Bowyer v. Knapp, 15 W. Va. 298, as stating the rule. However, the defendant appeared, set up want of proper service, then demurred and answered. He had notice, and was in court with a technical defense based on the service of the summons. In Stewart v. Stewart, 27 W. Va. 187, defendant had been served with the summons while in another state, and had been advised by counsel there that the process was not binding on her, and she made no appearance until nearly three years later, after the rights of others had intervened.

In Bowyer v. Knapp, supra, the question arose on a sheriff's return of a notice to take depositions, where the return was held to be prima facie true only. Even in McClung v. McWhorter, supra, one of the grounds for refusing relief in equity was that complainant did not aver that he had a defense to the judgment obtained on a false return. But it must be conceded that that decision expressly, and some of our other decisions tacitly, commit us to the verity doctrine. Shall we remain so? Here is a case which emphasizes the harshness of the doctrine, and impels more careful analysis of the reasons on which it is based. Plaintiff, according to the averments of the bill which are not now questioned, is about to be forced by execution to pay large sums of money, which it does not owe, by reason of judgments obtained on false returns, innocently made, no doubt. It never had any notice, actual or presumptive, of the pendency of the suits, and has a just defense to the claims on which they are based. Are the sheriff and his bondsmen financially responsible if redress is sought on his bond and judgment obtained? The rights of no third party have intervened. If defendants here are not entitled to the moneys, appellants having a just defense, is it in good conscience that they should take it, because of an innocent mistake? The results of the abolishment or abridgment of the verity doctrine in other states have demonstrated that the main reason given to sustain it, namely, that inconvenience would arise from uncertainty of judgments and decrees, is more of fancy than of fact; and we have concluded that a sheriff's return should not be deemed to be conclusively true as against a direct attack seasonably made after judgment by default, where it is shown that the return is false, and that defendant had no knowledge whatever of the pendency of the action, and where no rights of third parties are jeopardized. We have attempted in this opinion to draw a distinction in cases of judgment by default upon no notice either actual, presumptive, or constructive; and where there has been notice and a technicality is relied upon, or where the defendant has appeared, and denies service, but has opportunity to defend. In the latter instance we would deny the right to question the return.

[2] It may be proper to say that the evidence necessary to accomplish an overthrow of a false return should be clear, satisfactory and convincing. Kavanaugh v. Hamilton, 53 Colo. 157, 125 Pac. 512, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 76; Raulf v. Chicago Brick Co., 133 Wis. 126, 119 N. W. 646; Kochman v. O'Neill, 202 Ill. 110, 66 N. E. 1047. But as this question does not arise here, we state the quantum of evidence as the first impression.

"Equity may vacate or enjoin the judgment of a court of law when it is shown to be unjust and that the court rendering it never had jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, although assuming it, in consequence of a false return of service by the sheriff or other officer."

We reverse the decree, overrule the demurrer, and remand the cause.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 1, 1921. Rehearing Denied
Dec. 9, 1921.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Witnesses \S 396(1)—Not error to permit witness to say that he had made extrajudicial false statement at suggestion of another made in defendant's presence.

It is not error to allow a witness, who has made an extrajudicial statement, which he admits was in conflict with the facts within his knowledge at the time, to give as a reason for such untrue statement the advice given him by another party in the presence of the person to be affected thereby, where it appears that the person whose interest may be affected was in such a position that he would in all probability have overheard the advice so given the witness.

2. Witnesses \S 245—Refusal to permit witness to answer question, where answer has been previously given, is not error.

It is not error to refuse to permit a witness to answer a question eliciting information which he has given in answer to a question previously asked.

3. Criminal law \S 1170½(6)—Refusal to permit witness to answer question in particular form not error, when witness is permitted to answer in different form.

It is not error to refuse to permit a witness to answer a question in a particular form, even though the answer thereto is pertinent to the inquiry being conducted, when such witness is permitted to answer the same question in a different form.

4. Criminal law \S 809—Refusal of misleading instruction is not error.

Misleading instructions should not be given upon the trial of a case, and it is not error for the court to refuse to give an instruction, the only effect of which would be to confuse or mislead the jury.

5. Homicide \S 44—Provocation from sudden passion, reducing homicide to manslaughter, must arise from physical injury inflicted or attempted.

Provocation for the sudden passion which will reduce a homicide to voluntary manslaughter must arise from something more than a quarrel or altercation, which consists of a warm contention in words or a dispute carried on with heat or anger. Such provocation can arise only from a physical injury inflicted or attempted.

6. Homicide \S 45—Refusal of instruction that sufficient provocation might arise from sudden passion to reduce to voluntary manslaughter not error.

It is not error, upon the trial of one charged with murder, to refuse an instruction, the effect of which would be to tell the jury that sufficient provocation might arise from a quarrel or altercation between the parties for a sudden passion which would reduce the offense to voluntary manslaughter.

Error to Circuit Court, McDowell County.

Willard Murphy was convicted of murder in the second degree, and sentenced to the penitentiary, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Litz & Harman and Joseph M. Crockett, all of Welch, for plaintiff in error.

E. T. England, Atty. Gen., and R. A. Blessing, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RITZ, P. By this writ of error the defendant seeks a reversal of a judgment sentencing him to confinement in the penitentiary of this state rendered upon the verdict of a jury finding him guilty of murder in the second degree.

Defendant was charged with the murder of one Harry Swain on the 1st day of May, 1920. It appears that the deceased, Harry Swain, lived in Pocahontas, Va., some 14 or 15 miles from the residence of the defendant in McDowell county, W. Va., and that on the 1st day of May, 1920, Swain, together with a man by the name of Warburton, came to McDowell county for the ostensible purpose of procuring some whisky. They arrived at the home of the defendant Murphy about 1 o'clock in the afternoon of that day. Murphy had just left his house, but, observing these men stopping there, he returned, and Warburton and Swain ate dinner at Murphy's house. After dinner Murphy, Swain, and Warburton, together with a young man by the name of John Patterson, went up the creek upon which Murphy's house was situate to the residence of Mrs. Joe Freeman, and at that place a considerable quantity of whisky was procured and placed in a hand bag carried by Warburton. After leaving the Freeman residence, upon their return, it was suggested that they have a poker game. This was agreed to, and the parties entered into the game. It appears that Patterson lost what money he had in a very short time, and retired. Before this happened, however, a young man by the name of Walter Harman appeared upon the scene, and took part in the game for a short time. He, however, soon lost what money he had, and likewise retired. Swain, Warburton, and Murphy continued to play until about 6 o'clock in the evening, at which time, it is stated by Warburton, Murphy had lost all of his money, while Murphy states that he had lost up until the last hand, but that on the last hand he won a pot having in it something over $100, which practically made up his previous losses. Warburton states that when Murphy discovered that he had lost all of his money he asserted that the cards which were being used, and which had been furnished by Swain, were marked, and insisted that he would have his money back, and apparently with a view of enforcing his demand pulled his pistol from its holster and shot Swain, the bullet entering Swain's right shoulder and passing downward through his body, coming out at the back under the left shoulder blade.

Warburton says that after this shooting Murphy drew the pistol upon him, and that he told Murphy that he might have whatever money he (Warburton) had; that he did pull out his money, and that Murphy took $110 of it, and allowed him to retain $4. Murphy does not agree with Warburton as to the manner in which the shooting occurred. He says that when the last hand was placed, and it was discovered that he had the highest hand, both Warburton and Swain attempted to secure the stakes, and that he likewise reached for the pot which he had won; that Swain thereupon shoved him away with his left hand, and reached with his right hand to his hip pocket; that Swain continued to shove him away from the place where they were playing until he had gotten back to a point where he could go no further because of some bushes and undergrowth, and, believing that Swain was attempting to pull his pistol from his pocket for the purpose of shooting him, he drew his pistol and shot Swain. After the shooting Murphy fired his pistol to attract the attention of some one with a view of taking the wounded man to a doctor. It appears that two young men came along on horseback in a short time, and the horse of one of these young men was secured and Swain placed thereon, and Walter Harman, a brother-in-law of Murphy having come up in the meantime, got on the horse with Swain and took him to Murphy's house, Murphy, Warburton, and the owner of the horse, a boy by the name of Dillon, following on foot. When they reached Murphy's house they took Swain off the horse, and found that life was extinct. He was then placed upon the ground in close proximity to the house. Warburton says that Murphy stated to him at the place of the shooting, "If Swain dies you die with him," and that when they got to Murphy's house and found that Swain was dead, in answer to a question from Murphy as to whether he knew who killed Swain he (Warburton) replied that he did not; that he made this statement in contradiction to the fact because he was afraid that Murphy would kill him, and further because Murphy's brother-in-law, Walter Harman, who was present at the time, advised him to agree with any statement Murphy made. Warburton desired to return to his home in Virginia, and Murphy got his brother-in-law, Walter Harman, to escort Warburton across the line into Virginia, the means of conveyance being the horse belonging to the Dillon boy and a horse owned by Murphy, Murphy furnishing Warburton $10 for the purpose of paying expenses. It then appears that Murphy went to the home of his brother, a short distance away, where his wife and family were at the time; that some time during the night he went to his own residence, and removed the body of Swain to a secluded place in the woods, placed it behind a log, and covered it over with leaves and other debris. Murphy said nothing of the shooting to any one; neither did his brother-in-law, Walter Harman. After Warburton got back to Pocahontas he informed the chief of police of that town of the occurrence, and went with an officer to the town of Welch, the county seat of McDowell county, and communicated to the sheriff information as to the homicide. The sheriff sent a posse, together with Warburton, to the home of Murphy on the night of the 3d of May. Early on the morning of the 4th this posse entered Murphy's house before he was up, and placed him under arrest. It appears that at the time he denied that he knew where Swain's body was. He says that the reason he did this was because he did not want his wife to know anything about the transaction. A short distance from the house, however, he told the officers in charge of him that he would take them to the place where Swain's body was secreted. He did lead them to the place, and the body was removed. At the same time he also gave his version of the homicide. He was indicted in the criminal court of McDowell county, and on the 10th day of May, 1920, placed on trial, which trial resulted in the jury finding him guilty of murder in the second degree and the court passing sentence upon that verdict. To this judgment the circuit court of McDowell county granted a writ of error, but upon consideration affirmed the same.

The first error assigned by the defendant is to the action of the court in sustaining demurrers to two pleas in abatement filed by him, which charge the improper constitution of the grand jury making the indictment. Nothing is said in argument to support this assignment of error, nor is it insisted upon on this hearing. Apparently the defendant's counsel, upon consideration, deem it without merit, and we concur in this conclusion.

[1] The action of the court in permitting the witness Warburton to testify that another witness, Walter Harman, told him shortly after the occurrence to agree to whatever Murphy said, is assigned as error, for the alleged reason that the statement was not made in the presence of the accused. We do not consider this statement very material in any event. Warburton had admitted that he made a statement that he knew nothing about the homicide, and in explanation of this statement, which was in conflict with the facts, he stated that he made it through fear and because Harman told him to agree with whatever the accused wanted. The accused admits in his testimony that Warburton did know all about the homicide, being present at the time, and it is entirely immaterial whether or not Warburton made any explanation of his contradictory statement. But the ground of the objection is not well taken in any event as it appears from the testimony of Warburton that the accused was present and within three or four steps of Harman when he made the statement, and while the witness says it was not made in a loud tone of voice, still it would be almost inconceivable that such a statement could be made under such circumstances without it being heard by one so close to the party making it. It is true Murphy says he did not hear it, and Harman says he did not make it, but if it be considered that it is at all material in the case, the fact of whether it was made, or whether Murphy heard it, was for the jury.

[2] The defendant also assigns as error the action of the court in refusing to allow him to answer the following question propounded by his counsel:

"At the time you shot, as you have testified to, did you think you were in danger of death or great bodily harm at the hands of Harry Swain or Warburton?"

There is nothing in this assignment of error. The court's action in refusing to permit the witness to answer the question was evidently based upon the fact that it was leading and suggestive, and the further fact that the accused had already stated why he fired the fatal shot. In answer to a question theretofore asked him by his counsel as to why he shot Swain he replied, "Simply because I thought he was going to shoot me." There was no error in the court refusing to allow him to again give his reason for shooting the deceased.

[3] It is likewise assigned as error that the court refused to allow the defendant to state that he was on a higher elevation than the deceased at the time he fired the fatal shot. It is contended that the answer to this question would be very material in view of the fact that the bullet entered at the top of the right shoulder and ranged downward through Swain's body, indicating that the pistol from which the shot was fired must have been held above Swain's right shoulder. This condition of course, made it very important to show the relative positions of the parties at the time, particularly in view of the accused's reliance upon self-defense, and if the court had refused to allow the defendant to give his version of the relative positions of the parties, and the condition of the ground at the scene of the tragedy, it would have been error. Upon examining the record, however, we find that, while the court refused to allow him to answer the question about which complaint is made, he did permit and direct the witness to answer a question in which he was asked to describe the ground at the place of the occurrence, and how he and the accused were standing, and in answer to this question he did fully elucidate this point. The accused had the advantage of everything that he would have had had he been allowed to answer the particular question about which complaint is made.

It is likewise objected that the court refused to allow the defendant to testify as to whether or not there was any personal feeling or grudge of any kind existing between him and the deceased at the time of the tragedy. We find from an examination of the record that the accused did testify that there was no trouble or feeling of any kind existing between him and Swain previous to the time of the occurrence. It is true the court sustained an objection to the question in the form in which it was first propounded, but counsel immediately propounded it in a different form, and elicited the answer desired.

[4] The action of the court in refusing to give to the jury the following instruction, offered on behalf of the accused, is also assigned as error:

"The court instructs the jury that the fact that the defendant hid or concealed the body of deceased cannot be considered by them in aggravation of the offense with which he is charged."

This instruction could not have been of any assistance to the jury in reaching a correct conclusion upon the matters submitted to them for decision. It tells the jury that the fact that Murphy hid the body of Swain could not be considered in aggravation of the offense with which Murphy was charged. The offense charged in the indictment is murder in the first degree, and of course it would be very difficult to aggravate an offense of that character. But even if it be said that the indictment also charges the various degrees of homicide recognized by the law, and that this instruction was meant to apply to those lower than murder in the first degree, the query naturally arises, To which one is it intended to apply? This evidence was admissible as characterizing the acts of Murphy. His conduct in hiding the body of his victim was the result of mental reaction from the occurrence in which he had theretofore recently engaged, and the mental attitude of a party during a particular transaction is frequently accurately reflected by his subsequent conduct. No purpose could have been accomplished in giving this instruction except to confuse the jury, and perhaps indicate to them that in the opinion of the court the fact that the body was concealed by the accused immediately after the occurrence was of no weight.

[5, 6] The court's refusal to give the following instruction is also assigned as error:

"The court instructs the jury that, although you may believe from the evidence in this case that at the time the defendant fired the shot resulting in the death of Harry Swain, he, the defendant, was not justified in so doing in self-defense, yet if you further believe from the evidence that at the time of firing the shot the defendant and the said Swain were in a quarrel and altercation, that the act was done by the defendant in passion and heat of blood on sudden provocation, then you cannot find the defendant guilty of any offense higher than voluntary manslaughter."

This instruction attempts to give to the jury the law governing voluntary manslaughter, and it will be noted that it tells the jury that if Swain and the accused were in a quarrel and altercation, and that the shooting was done by the defendant in passion and heat of blood on provocation, he would only be guilty of voluntary manslaughter. The instruction does not tell the jury what provocation will reduce a homicide to voluntary manslaughter except inferentially. By necessary inference it does say that if the accused was provoked into a sudden passion by a quarrel or altercation in which he and the deceased were engaged, that would reduce the shooting to voluntary manslaughter. It is quite well established that no provocation arising from mere words, however violent or insulting, will reduce a homicide to voluntary manslaughter. State v. Crawford, 66 W. Va. 114,¹ and authorities there cited. There must be some actual affray, some physical encounter, which excites passion to constitute such provocation. If the court had given this instruction he would have said in effect to the jury that anger or passion arising from a quarrel or altercation which consists of nothing more than a contention by words may be sufficient provocation to reduce a homicide from murder in the first or second degree to voluntary manslaughter. In this case the vice of such an instruction is apparent. According to the testimony introduced by the state, there was no affray or physical encounter between the parties, nothing more than some contention by words, entirely insufficient to furnish provocation for a sudden passion which would reduce the offense to voluntary manslaughter, but the effect of this instruction would have been to tell the jury that this contending by words might furnish such provocation.

Upon the whole case it appears that the accused has had a fair and impartial trial before the tribunal constituted by law for that purpose, and we see no reason for disturbing the judgment complained of. It is therefore affirmed.

CASDORPH et al. v. HINES, Director General of Railroads. (No. 4224.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 8, 1921. Rehearing Denied
Dec. 9, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Railroads \S 348(4)—Testimony of witnesses in position to observe failure to give crossing signals entitled to peculiar weight.

In an action for injuries sustained by the driver of a wagon at a railway crossing, the testimony of witnesses, who were in position to observe with unusual care the failure of the railway company's agents to sound the whistle or bell of the approaching locomotive, is entitled to peculiar weight.

2. Railroads \S 346(5)—Injury at crossing not in itself evidence of contributory negligence.

Infliction of an injury at a railroad crossing is not in itself evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the person injured.

3. Railroads \S 350(13)—Contributory negligence at crossing may in some circumstances be question for court.

Whether an injury inflicted at a railroad crossing was due to the negligence of the person injured, or whether but for his negligence the injury would not have occurred, may in some circumstances be questions for the court to determine.

4. Railroads \S 350(13)—Contributory negligence at crossing question for jury on conflicting evidence.

But where the facts are controverted, or, if not controverted, are such as warrant either of two reasonable inferences or conclusions as to the negligence of the person injured, one of which would warrant and the other preclude recovery by him, or his personal representatives, it is for the jury to say in such a case whether the person exercised due care for his own protection in driving upon the crossing.

5. Railroads \S 350(28)—Contributory negligence of traveler relying on flagman's omission of signal question for jury.

It is a matter of common knowledge and experience that travelers approaching a railway crossing, where gates or flagman are usually maintained, take into consideration that fact in determining their course of conduct, and it is for the jury to determine whether in relying upon the omission of the flagman to give the proper signal the traveler has given that circumstance such weight and consideration as an ordinary prudent man would under such circumstances.

6. Railroads \S 330(2)—Flagman's omission of signal circumstance to be considered in determining care by traveler.

The omission of a flagman stationed at a crossing to give the customary stop signal

¹For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes is a circumstance to be considered with all other facts and circumstances in determining the degree of care exercised by an approaching traveler.

7. Railroads ☞327(1)—Traveler not bound to look and listen in one particular direction.

A traveler approaching a crossing is not bound to look and listen exclusively in one particular direction for an approaching train, since danger might come from another; it being also his duty to observe the signals of the flagman stationed there for his protection against injury.

8. Railroads ☞327(1)—Traveler under no absolute duty to stop, look, and listen under all circumstances.

A traveler approaching a crossing is under no absolute duty to stop, look, and listen for approaching trains under any and all circumstances. The failure so to do is no more than a circumstance for the jury to consider in determining the degree of care exercised by him.

9. Railroads ☞347(11)—Testimony as to flagman's practice to warn travelers admissible on issue of contributory negligence.

Where the evidence for the plaintiff shows that the person injured was accustomed to drive over a crossing at frequent intervals, testimony as to a flagman's habitual practice to warn travelers of approaching trains is admissible and important, as tending to prove his knowledge of and reliance upon the flagman's duty to give such warning.

Error to Circuit Court, Kanawha County.

Action by John O. Casdorph and others, as executors of Caleb Casdorph, deceased, against Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads, for damages for the death of the deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed and remanded for retrial.

Linn & Byrne, of Charleston, for plaintiffs in error.

W. N. King, of Columbus, Ohio, and Leroy Allebach, of Charleston, for defendant in error.

LYNCH, J. Caleb Casdorph, while driving his horse and light wagon along Virginia street in the city of Charleston, attempted to drive over defendant's railway tracks where they intersect the public road or street, and in doing so was struck by an east-bound passenger train operated by defendant's agents, his wagon demolished, his horse fatally hurt, and he himself sustained injuries from which he died a few minutes later. His executors sued to recover damages for the injuries, and from a judgment for defendant, directed by the trial court, they have brought the case here for review.

From the testimony and map filed, it appears that the street and tracks approach and cross each other at an acute angle. The tracks, three in number, extend approximately east and west, and Virginia street in a somewhat southeasterly direction through that part of the city traversed by it. At the time of the accident, about 9 o'clock in the morning, as was his custom for years, Casdorph was driving towards the business center of Charleston from his country home, Virginia street being his most direct and convenient route into the city. A short distance from the railroad, Mrs. Casdorph having alighted from the wagon, he continued the journey unattended.

Certainly, at least five persons saw him between this time and the collision, which occurred a few minutes later. Three of them, the watchman on duty at the crossing, James, who saw the accident from his office window 150 feet away, and Nunnally, who was standing against a truck in the street about 160 feet beyond the tracks, witnessed the actual impact of the locomotive with the wagon. Two others, Singleton and Littlepage, also on their way to Charleston, had crossed the tracks in an automobile, and were distant also about 150 feet when the crash caused by the collision occurred.

While charging defendant with general negligence and carelessness in the operation of the train and locomotive, the chief points relied on in the proof were the failure to give proper warning of the train's approach by means of the locomotive whistle or bell, and more especially the omission of the watchman stationed at the crossing to apprise Casdorph of the proximity of the train before he went upon the tracks. Defendant, on the other hand, insists that, assuming—though we suppose not conceding—that the proper signals and warnings were not given, still, the decedent, under the facts presented, was guilty of such contributory negligence, as would preclude recovery. As the trial court sustained the motion to exclude plaintiff's evidence, and directed a verdict for defendant, the principal question presented here is whether the court erred in holding decedent guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

The solution of this question necessitates a further inquiry into the facts. Casdorph, it appears, was 83 years old, but as no evidence was introduced as to his physical incapacity, his advanced age need not be considered. He was driving a gentle horse, and, according to Singleton, who with Littlepage passed decedent about 100 feet from the crossing, was "holding over to the right of the street." Apparently oblivious of the impending danger, he did not look in the direction of the train, but "just came right on, and the train was coming," decedent being within 15 or 18 feet of the center of the crossing when the train, then about 100 feet distant, sounded several sharp distress blasts with its whistle. James says he received no warning from the watchman, and Singleton and Littlepage, who, after passing decedent, crossed the tracks slightly ahead of the train, approaching rapidly from the west, insist that the watchman, at the time they passed him, was not out in the street, but was standing between the curb and his watch house, with his back partly towards them, his signal staff resting upon the ground, and that he offered no word of warning, although the train was then very near. They were first apprised of its approach at about the same time they passed decedent, by the steam and smoke, which they saw emanating from the locomotive, which they judged to be about 300 feet from the crossing, the train itself being at least partially obscured from view by several box cars standing on the track nearest the street. Concerned primarily with their own safety, and being then within a very short distance of the tracks, they undertook to cross, and succeeded in crossing, ahead of the train.

Witness James corroborates so much of Singleton's and Littlepage's testimony as relates to decedent's actions, and, in addition, states that, although he noticed Casdorph when the latter was about 60 feet from the crossing, the train then being perhaps 400 feet distant, the watchman "showed no indication of recognizing Casdorph's approach," and continues with the statement as to the short distress blasts of the whistle, already referred to. All the witnesses who testify about the matter agree that the atmosphere was very dense and foggy, for which reason the steam and smoke, which Littlepage observed, lay low along the ground, and to some extent obstructed the view of the train, as did also the box cars mentioned, and in addition say that they heard no warning from whistle or bell, except the several short blasts immediately preceding the collision.

[1] As these witnesses were in position to observe with unusual care the circumstances surrounding the accident, their testimony as to the neglect to sound the customary warnings by bell or whistle or both within a reasonable distance from the crossing, a duty dictated by reason and required by statute (section 61, c. 54, Code 1918 [Code 1913, § 2971]), is entitled to peculiar weight (Carnes v. Railroad Co., 73 W. Va. 534, 537, 82 S. E. 219; Railroad Co. v. Bryant, 95 Va. 213, 28 S. E. 183). But as the court's ruling could not have been founded on these facts, sufficiently proved, it is necessary to consider decedent's alleged contributory negligence, which, according to defendant's argument, was the proximate cause of the collision.

[2-4] On this question, the case of Canterbury v. Director General, 104 S. E. 597, is very instructive. That case also involved a collision at a crossing, and, as here, defendant relied for defense on the contributory negligence of the injured man. "It must be borne in mind" says the court, "that the fact that one is injured at a railway crossing does not of itself prove that he is guilty of contributory negligence," and further:

"Each case of this character must turn upon its own peculiar state of facts. Ordinarily, where the facts are not in dispute * * * the question of contributory negligence is for the court; but where the facts are disputed, or where they are not disputed, and two reasonable inferences may be drawn therefrom, or two reasonable conclusions as to the conduct of the plaintiff may be reached therefrom, one of which would make the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence and the other of which would relieve him thereof, it is for the jury to say, upon a consideration of all the circumstances, whether or not he was at the time of the injury in the exercise of due care."

This doctrine is supported by many decisions, notably Carnes v. Railroad Co., supra, and City of Elkins v. Railway Co., 76 W. Va. 733, 86 S. E. 762, 1 A. L. R. 198. See, also, Massoth v. Delaware & Hudson Canal Co., 64 N. Y. 524; Valin v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 82 Wis. 1, 51 N. W. 1034, 33 Am. St. Rep. 17, and note.

This rule being thus clearly announced, its applicability to the facts here presented remains to be considered. Is the fact of contributory negligence on the part of Casdorph disputed? May two reasonable inferences be drawn from his conduct? Without undertaking to speculate upon what acts or dereliction the order of the court below was predicated, it would appear that defendant relied largely upon the suggestion that decedent, without observing the precaution of stopping, looking, or listening for an approaching train, recklessly drove upon the crossing, known by him to be dangerous.

The evidence tends strongly to prove that the view of the center track, upon which the train was approaching, was to some extent obstructed—although defendant disputes this contention—by the box cars; that the atmosphere was foggy and murky, by reason of which the smoke from the locomotive did not rise as it ordinarily would; and the absence of a signal or warning by the train until decedent was within 15 or 18 feet of the center of the crossing. It has also been suggested, and reasonably so, that the very fact of Littlepage's automobile passing on to the left of the wagon distracted decedent's attention, and enabled Littlepage and Singleton more easily to look over and beyond the box cars and see the smoke of the oncoming locomotive. From these observations, it seems reasonably clear that there was little, if anything, to attract Casdorph's attention to the danger, so perhaps, with his eyes upon the tracks, he drove upon them, as James says, without any sign or warning from the watchman, who stood near the side of the street, probably with his back towards decident. This circumstance introduces another, possibly the controlling, element in the case; to what extent may a traveler depend upon the absence of the warning signal from the watchman, as he approaches a place of danger.

[5] As the railroad had employed and for 8 years kept a watchman at the crossing, during which time decident had used it "on an average once in 10 days during certain seasons of the year," no reasonable question could arise as to Casdorff's knowledge of the watchman's customary presence or his duties there. Travelers under such circumstances have, within certain limits, a right to assume that, in the absence of such signal, no train is approaching. 3 Elliott, Railroads (3d Ed.) 516:

"It is a matter of common knowledge and experience that travelers approaching a railway crossing at a time when gates or flagmen are ordinarily or usually maintained take into consideration that fact in determining their course of conduct, and it is for the jury to determine whether or not, in a particular case, a traveler has given that circumstance such weight and consideration as the great mass of mankind ordinarily do under such circumstances, except in cases where it clearly appears that the traveler has approached the crossing in a careless and heedless manner without the proper regard for his own safety." Gundlach v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. et al., 172 Wis. 438, 179 N. W. 577.

[6] This case, we think, states fairly the principles involved in the present inquiry. There are decisions that go even further in support of decident's conduct, those out of which has grown the theory that the absence of the customary signal amounts to an invitation to cross (Illinois C. R. Co. v. Lindgren, 80 Ill. App. 609; Chicago & Alton Ry. Co. v. Wright, 120 Ill. App. 218; McNamara v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 126 Mo. App. 152, 103 S. W. 1093; Wiggin v. Boston & Maine R. Co., 75 N. H. 600, 75 Atl. 103), but for present purposes, at least, it is not necessary to apply that doctrine, but rather the view of the Gundlach Case, that such omission was a circumstance to be considered with all other facts in determining whether decident exercised that degree of care ordinarily required under the same circumstances. The latter seems more reasonable, and finds ample support in authority. Morrissey v. B. & M. R. Co., 216 Mass. 5, 102 N. E. 924; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hutchinson, 120 Ill. 587, 11 N. E. 855; Louisville & Interurban R. Co. v. Schuester, 183 Ky. 504, 209 S. W. 542, 4 A. L. R. 1344, and Kimball v. Friend, 95 Va. 140, 27 S. E. 904, from which we quote as follows:

"The erection of gates, gongs, or other devices at highway or street crossings to warn travelers of approaching trains does not excuse a traveler at such crossings from exercising ordinary care and caution. And while courts and text-writers differ as to the degree of reliance that may be placed upon the invitation which an open gate or silent gong gives to the traveler to cross, they generally, if not universally, hold that the same degree of care and caution is not required of him as if there were no such invitation. * * * The question of negligence in such a case is peculiarly one for the * * * jury."

[7, 8] It is difficult to credit the argument in defendant's brief that Casdorff took no care whatever of his own safety. He may have acted as prudently as another in the same circumstances, as prudently as Littlepage and Singleton, had they not been fortunate enough to notice the smoke lying low above the box cars. May not prudence have demanded even that he should have directed his eyes towards the road ahead, possibly towards the watchman stationed there for his guidance?

"A traveler is not required to keep his eye in one particular direction for an approaching engine, since direct danger might approach from either way, and it was his duty to observe at the same time the watchman." McNamara v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., supra.

See, also, Louisville & Interurban R. Co. v. Schuester, supra. This court, as well as many others, does not follow the so-called Pennsylvania doctrine that there is an absolute duty to stop, look, and listen. As stated in the Canterbury Case, since there are many instances where such action would place the traveler in no better position to observe the danger signals than if he merely looked from his moving conveyance, it would often be a useless caution. May not such have been the case here?

The circumstances discussed in the foregoing paragraphs are sufficient to lead to the reasonable conviction that other proper and justifiable inferences as to decident's approach to the crossing may have been drawn by the jury, had the facts been left to their consideration. The direction of the verdict, therefore, was not justified by the evidence submitted.

[9] So far we have confined our remarks chiefly to the third point of error specified by plaintiffs, namely, the directing of the verdict instead of submitting the question to the jury. There remain two others: (1) The excluding of evidence tending to prove the customary conduct and practice of the watchman at this crossing to give notice of approaching trains to travelers; and (2) the excluding of evidence tending to show the condition of the street and railway tracks at the crossing.

Both of these inquiries were raised upon questions directed to Littlepage. The first, relating to the watchman's custom, was objected to and not answered, counsel for plaintiffs stating to the court that they thereby desired to prove by the witness that the watchman made it an invariable practice to stand in the middle of the street, and there warn travelers of approaching trains. Such testimony was relevant and admissible, and also an important element of the case. In order to prove reliance by Casdorph to any extent upon the watchman's signal, it was of course necessary to show his acquaintance with the watchman's usual practice. It having already been shown that decedent was accustomed to drive over the crossing at frequent intervals, and that a watchman had been stationed there for 8 years or more, we think the evidence proper for the purpose.

As to the second ground of error, the striking out of Littlepage's testimony regarding the condition of the street and crossing, we need only say that, while of small evidentiary value, so far as it relates to the issue, there is no objection to its admissibility. Although counsel give us no information as to their purpose in offering such testimony, it may have been of some assistance to the jury in their consideration of decedent's conduct.

For the reasons assigned, we reverse the judgment, and remand the case for retrial.

On Rehearing.

By way of reply to the criticism of counsel in their petition for rehearing, this note seems advisable. There is no disposition on our part to hold them responsible for the points in the syllabus criticized by them. The points state the law applicable to the facts in the case, notwithstanding their objection. The restatement and reapplication of a legal principle when appropriate do not warrant condemnation.

In the petition counsel quote only part of section 1661, 3 Elliott, Railroads (3d. Ed.):

"The general rule is that it is not sufficient to look in one direction, but the traveler is under a duty to look in both directions. The duty to look and listen requires the traveler to exercise care to select a position from which an effective observation can be made."

In the same section the author, after stating the rule affirmed by the authorities as to the duties of travelers approaching a railroad crossing to look and listen, and the right of a court to direct a verdict for defendant if the performance of the duty is omitted, qualifies the general statement by the additional phrase "except in cases of a peculiar nature, where there are facts excusing the performance of that duty." And, although the failure of a flagman to give the signal to cross, or an express invitation by him to cross, does not absolve the traveler from the duty to look and listen, either or both of these omissions "may be sufficient to carry the case to the jury." Elliott, Railroads (3d. Ed.) §§ 1651, 1661, citing Buchanan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 75 Iowa, 393, 39 N. W. 663, which supports the text. There the flagman gave plaintiff the signal to cross, and she obeyed, although she knew the train was approaching, and it arrived at the crossing before she did, wherefore he stopped her, but the train so alarmed her horse that it ran away and caused the injury for which she sued. Of course, in facts like those in Delkman v. Morgan L. & T. R. & S. B. Co., 40 La. Ann. 787, 5 South. 76, Lake Shore & Mich. So. Ry. Co. v. Ehlert, Adm'r, 63 Ohio St. 320, 58 N. E. 812, Allerton v. Boston & Maine R. Co., 146 Mass. 241, 15 N. E. 621, and Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. Colvin, 118 Pa. 230, 12 Atl. 837, in each of which the railroad company's agents exercised the utmost caution to prevent the collisions, the court properly held in each case that the negligence of the plaintiff was the proximate cause of the injury.

A traveler must not omit precautions legally necessary for his own safety when about to drive over a railroad crossing—

"for under all circumstances he must himself exercise ordinary care, and must not rely entirely upon the acts of others, but, as we have said, what is or is not ordinary care depends very often upon the facts of the particular case. Under the rule just stated, namely, that whether due care was exercised depends upon the facts of the particular case, the question whether the traveler stopped at a proper place or the like is generally a question for the jury, but it is sometimes a question of law. If there is but one reasonable inference that men of average intelligence can justly draw from the facts, the question is one of law to be disposed of by the court." Elliott, Railroads (3d Ed.) § 1661.

Counsel also seem to be of the opinion that we fail to interpret properly the evidence of the lack of reasonable care on the part of Casdorph, and the exercise of reasonable diligence on the part of the flagman. Both Littlepage and Singleton, when in the act of passing over the crossing, or just before or after they had crossed it, saw him, but, so far as they could recall, he did not notice them. He was there between the street curb and the "little house" occupied by him in cold weather, and, although at that time he had in his hands a jack staff with the word "Stop" at the top, he gave them no signal or warning. "He was not the regular watchman," and did not hold it so it could be read by them, or by any one approaching from the direction they were driving. James corroborates Littlepage and Singleton in this and other particulars. The watchman, he says, did halt some taxicabs driving westward towards the crossing, Casdorph approaching it in an easterly direction. When he did so, however, his face was towards James, who was east of the crossing and in a position where he could see it and the railroad track 400 feet west of the crossing and the watchman, who at the time was standing facing James, and who "showed no indication of recognizing Mr. Casdorph's approach, neither did Mr. Casdorph look that way. He just came right on and the train was coming."

The record furnishes no substantial support for the statement that, while Casdorph was in a place of safety, he could have saved his life, had he heeded the signals given of the approach of the train. There is now no evidence of the giving of any signal until he was within 15 or 18 feet of the center of the crossing, and the train 75 feet from it. To avoid a collision in circumstances such as this record presents would require unusually expeditious action. In any event, however, these facts are for the jury.

PAYNE v. WRIGHT BROS. CO. (No. 4280.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 22, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Pleading \S 192(2)—Declaration not demurrable where showing cause of action with reasonable certainty.

A declaration is not subject to successful challenge by demurrer where it shows with reasonable certainty the cause of action and the negligence on which the action is based.

2. Master and servant \S 155(1)—Employer failing to warn employee of latent defect liable for injury.

If an employer knows or ought to have known of latent defects in the place at which he engaged his employee to work, without warning him of the existence of such defects, and he had no notice or knowledge of their existence, and in the exercise of reasonable care did not and could not ascertain their existence, and, because of want of knowledge and means of knowledge, received an injury which resulted in immediate death, the employer is liable in damages at the suit of decedent's personal representative.

3. Master and servant \S 88(1)—Contract generally immaterial.

A contract for the performance of labor in the construction of a cesspool, to serve as a receptacle of fecal and urinous deposits in a privy, generally is immaterial in the trial of an action for personal injury except in so far as it may be necessary to show by what right the person injured was at the place the injury occurred.

4. Master and servant \S 155(1)—Failure to warn employee digging cesspool held negligence.

Where a cesspool, in the form of a circular well 30 feet deep, on a town lot, intended as a conduit to receive and convey fecal and urinous substances from a privy to lower sand or gravel stratum for absorption by or percolation through the stratum, and, to remove some invisible obstruction to the free discharge of the accumulation, the lot owner caused a charge of dynamite to be exploded in the well, the explosion being unsuccessful, and engaged the service of an employee to drill or excavate another similar well within 2½ to 3 feet of the other for the same purpose, and to connect them by drainage tile, and the employee, without being informed by the owner, and not knowing, and in the exercise of ordinary care could not have ascertained, that the well had been shot and its walls thereby probably weakened, and without such notice or knowledge had virtually completed the excavation work, when the walls collapsed, and the contents of the cesspool submerged and suffocated him, the owner is liable in damage for such negligence on his part to give warning of the danger incident to such employment.

5. Trial \S 252(11)—Instruction not supported by evidence held properly rejected.

Rulings upon instructions requested and refused or given considered, discussed, and approved.

Error to Circuit Court, Wayne County.

Action by G. W. Payne, administrator of the estate of Charles Payne, deceased, against the Wright Bros. Company for damages for the wrongful death of plaintiff's intestate. Judgment on the verdict for plaintiff, defendant's motion for new trial overruled, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Vinson, Thompson, Meek & Renshaw and Marcum & Marcum, all of Huntington, for plaintiff in error.

R. S. Dinkle and R. O. Preston, both of Catlettsburg, Ky, and J. M. Rigg, of Huntington, for defendant in error.

LYNCH, J. The ruling of the trial court upon defendant's motion for a new trial and the entry of a judgment upon a verdict for plaintiff and the matters of law and fact upon which the motion depends are the subjects to be investigated and decided upon this writ.

Charles Payne, plaintiff's son and intestate, died from suffocation in a well he contracted to construct for Wright Bros. Company, a corporation, November 17, 1914. He had almost completed the necessary excavation, and at the time of the injury was in the well preparing it to receive the brick work he agreed to do, as part of the contract between him and defendant. Near the well excavated by him was another, the two being separated by a wall of earth from 2½ to 3 feet in thickness, protected only by a brick wall inclosing the first one dug, to prevent subsidence of the surrounding earth into that well and thereby thwart the purpose it was intended to serve. In some manner and to some extent the well had become obstructed, and for that reason did not perform the function contemplated by defendant, namely, to act as a conduit or channel for sewage from a privy on the lot to the lower stratum of sand or gravel, where the contents were supposed to percolate through or to be absorbed in the stratum, whatever the formation may have been. To remove the obstruction the defendant caused dynamite to be exploded in the well, or, to use the parlance popular in the oil fields, shot the well. As the explosive, however, proved unavailing, defendant decided to dig the second well alongside the first, and employed Charles Payne to do the necessary work. This he did with the assistance of the plaintiff, his father, and a brother named Henderson. Before the accident that caused his death occurred he had completed the excavation and was at the bottom of the well, then about 30 feet below the surface, preparing it to receive the open brick work, a part of his contract, when, without warning, the wall between the two wells collapsed in part, thereby permitting the fecal and liquid contents of the old well to envelop and suffocate him.

The only defect in the declaration to which defendant demurred is the failure to allege the negligent act of omission or commission of which defendant was guilty, or but for which the accident would not have happened, and death would not have ensued. Defendant does not seem to have misapprehended the pleading and could not well misapprehend it. It shows with sufficient perspicuity the omission of the ordinary duty to inform an employee of the latent dangers and hazards of the employment when the employer knows what they are, and the employee does not, and perhaps could not in the exercise of reasonable care, know, or anticipate. Payne, of course, knew the old well was there and what its purpose was, but, according to the allegations of the declaration, he also knew that the wall of the well was supported by inside columns of brick, and that, if theretofore undisturbed by an internal or external violent force or explosion, the brick inclosure would afford him ample protection against the danger that culminated in his death. Defendant without doubt was fully aware of the use of the dynamite, and the probable, if not the certain, weakening of the wall of brick and earth, and, being so aware, it was its duty to warn decedent of these conditions. Defendant does not pretend that Charles Payne had any information or knowledge of the explosion in the well and no reason to suspect the impairment of the brick wall or its displacement by the explosion, or of the use of dynamite in it. These matters the declaration avers with sufficient particularity to enable a person possessed of the usual faculties to understand what he is called upon to answer and enable him to prepare his defense.

[1-4] Defendant also relies for the reversal of the judgment upon variance between the averments of the declaration and the proof. According to the declaration the parties to the contract were defendant, on the one hand, and the three Paynes, the plaintiff and his two sons, Charles and Henderson, on the other; and by the proof for plaintiff the contract was between defendant and decedent. This, however, is not a suit on the contract; it is an action to recover damages for a wrong for which defendant is called upon to render compensation to plaintiff, next of kin to decedent and his heir at law. The sole purpose for averring the contract is to show the reason for decedent's presence upon the premises. There is, it is true, some disagreement between plaintiff and defendant as to who are the real parties to the contract. Maxwellton Wright, defendant's president and business manager, testifies that he and plaintiff were the only parties to the contract. This question, however, is only speculative, and, if it were serious, it could not be raised for the first time upon this writ. Bertha Zinc Co. v. Martin, 93 Va. 791, 22 S. E. 869, 70 L. R. A. 999; Shenandoah, etc., R. Co. v. Moose, 83 Va. 827, 3 S. E. 796; Richmond R., etc., Co. v. West, 100 Va. 184, 40 S. E. 643; Moore Lime Co. v. Johnston, 103 Va. 84, 48 S. E. 557.

The exact location of the excavation, as designated by Maxwellton Wright, is also a matter of dispute between the parties. According to his testimony, the location to be drilled or dug was 12 feet from the old or first well, thus leaving sufficient space between it and the new one to afford ample protection against the possibility of an injury in doing the work required by defendant. The evidence, however, so clearly preponderates in support of the location at which the excavation was made, $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 feet from the first, as to warrant the finding of the jury as disclosed by their verdict.

Counsel for defendant in argument insist and rely upon the right to treat decedent as an independent contractor or subcontractor, or an employee of one or the other of such agencies, and thereby defeat legal recovery against their client. It is difficult to comprehend the force of this contention, if force it has. They attempted to prove a contract with George W. Payne, the father, and plaintiff, and to show that Charles Payne had no part in the arrangement, or in doing the work except as an employee of his father, and the communication by Maxwellton Wright to the father during the negotiation preliminary to the agreement later consummated by them. Here again the evidence, though conflicting and apparently almost equally preponderant, was for the jury to determine, and they did determine the conflict in favor of the plaintiff.

But, if it be admitted that plaintiff was a party to the contract and decedent was his employee, the admission does not absolve defendant from liability, if the facts were as they appear in the record to have been, unless the father knew or was informed by Maxwellton Wright of the dangerous condition produced by the explosion in the old well. There is not the slightest intimation that decedent was advised or knew of its impairment by the explosion, or could have known of it if he had examined it with that end in view. Whether it was necessary for Wright to impart knowledge of that condition to any other than the person with whom the contract was made is a question that does not fairly arise from the facts in evidence, and for that reason it is not decided. With the exception of the testimony relative to the actual participants in the making of the contract the trial proceeded almost exclusively upon the theory of nonliability on the part of the defendant in any event. This theory manifestly appears in the discussion of the rulings upon the instructions later referred to.

As to liability of defendant for the injury inflicted, as it was, under the circumstances related, conceding the contract was not with him, and assuming that he was merely an employee of his father, and that neither of them knew of the explosion and the damage to the wells, the only authority that need be cited is Wilson v. Valley Improvement Co., 69 W. Va. 778, 73 S. E. 64, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 271, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 791. Plaintiff in that case was, when injured, an employee of defendant, and as such was engaged in the performance of a contract between defendant and the owner of the property for wiring a building for electricity, the injury having resulted from a defect in a scaffold erected by or for the owner, and necessary to enable the employee to wire the building, if indeed the owner did not erect it pursuant to his agreement with the employer. The question of liability predicated upon substantially similar facts makes that case peculiarly pertinent here, and the discussion appropriate and controlling. The decision is elaborate, logical, and convincing, and, while the defendant was exonerated, it was because the owner, not he, was the party at fault.

[5] The only other question is as to the giving and refusal of instructions. Of these three were asked by plaintiff and two were given, and seven by defendant and four were given, and defendant excepted to the refusal of the three asked by him, and to the two given for plaintiff. These instructions have received careful consideration, and the examination has led to the conviction that the trial court committed no error in its rulings on them. As said before, they were requested by the parties and propounded by the court in part and refused in part upon the theory that decedent was the contractor. Plaintiff's No. 1, after the usual advisory restriction, or limitation to a belief founded upon the evidence, told the jury that, if they believed there was a contract between Charley Payne and defendant to drill a new well for the purpose of draining the old one, and that defendant had caused the latter to be shot to remove obstructions from it, and that the shot injured the walls, and that defendant failed to inform Charley Payne that the well had been shot, and Charley Payne had no knowledge, and by the exercise of due care could not have known, that it had been shot, or that the well walls had thereby been injured to such an extent that the well broke through into the well being dug by decedent, thereby causing his death, and, if they did so believe from the evidence, then they should find for plaintiff. Plaintiff's No. 3, which was given, No. 2 being refused, is like the other in every particular except that it proceeds upon decedent's right to assume that the premises were in a reasonably safe condition and not rendered dangerous by any latent or unseen defects, other than those usually attendant upon such work, and that the caving in of the old wall was caused by dynamiting it, and concluding as No. 1 did as to defendant's knowledge and decedent's lack of knowledge and means of knowledge, etc.

Of defendant's instructions Nos. 1, 2, 5, 6, and 7 were given as requested; defendant cannot and plaintiff does not complain. The court refused No. 3 because covered by No. 2, and No. 4 because covered by No. 7. In so far as the principles embodied in Nos. 2 and 3 are concerned, they are in effect the same. For, as stated, it is immaterial with whom the contract was made as between G. W. Payne and Charley Payne, and No. 2 requires the jury to find for the defendant if the contract was not made with Charley Payne, and No. 3 to find for defendant if they believe G. W. Payne was the contractor. But No. 3 is silent upon the question of the knowledge of the shooting of the well and the impairment due to the shot. So that in substance and effect Nos. 2 and 3 are the same.

While there is not the same similarity between Nos. 4 and 7, they are substantially alike in principle. No. 4 was predicated upon Charley Payne's knowledge of the dangerous nature of the work he contracted to do, owing to the explosion, and if with that knowledge be performed the work, plaintiff cannot recover in the action. There is not in the evidence the slightest intimation of the possession by him of any such knowledge and information, and hence No. 4 was properly rejected for that reason alone, without regard to No. 7.

Being unable to find error in the proceeding, our order will affirm the judgment.

STATE ex rel. WORKMAN v. ANDERSON,
Judge (two cases). (Nos. 4372, 4373.)(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 13, 1921. Rehearing Denied
Dec. 9, 1921.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. Bribery ⇨(1)—Prohibition ⇨10(3)— County court commissioner accepting bribe is not guilty of a felony; where court without jurisdiction assumes to try relator for felony, prohibition will lie.

A commissioner of the county court who, as such, receives and accepts a bribe intended to influence him in the discharge of his official duties, is not guilty of a felony and subject to the penalty imposed by section 5a(3) of chapter 147 of the Code of 1918 (Code 1913, § 5251), and the court in which an indictment is returned against him for a felony for so receiving and accepting such bribe is without jurisdiction to try him for a felony, and if such court has assumed jurisdiction to try for a felony prohibition will lie.

*(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)2. Bribery ⇨1(2)—"Officers of this State" does not apply to officers generally.

The phrase "officers of this state" as used in Const. art. 6, § 45 and Code 1918, c. 147, § 5a(3), relating to bribery of executive or judicial officers of this state, applies only to officers such as the governor, attorney general, members of the public service commission, commissioner of banking, and like officers, whose powers or duties extend over the state, and does not apply to officers generally and indiscriminately.

Proceeding by the State, on the relation of D. F. Workman, against John M. Anderson, Judge, for writ of prohibition to prevent the trial of the relator on two indictments for felony. Writ awarded.

C. M. Ward and Hugh A. Dunn, both of Beckley, for relator.

E. T. England, Atty. Gen., R. Dennis Steed, Asst. Atty. Gen., D. D. Ashworth, Pros. Atty., and J. W. Maxwell, both of Beckley, and Osenton & Lee, of Fayetteville, for respondent.

LIVELY, J. At the March term, 1921, of the criminal court of Raleigh county, two indictments were returned against D. F. Workman, each for a felony, charging him with accepting certain bribes as commissioner of the county court of that county in the performance of his official duty. The first felony indictment charged him with accepting and receiving from one C. L. Lilly the sum of $2,500, paid or given to said Workman by said Lilly upon an agreement between them that Workman, then a commissioner of the county court, would vote for the purchase of a tract of land of 79 acres which Lilly was offering to sell to the county court for county purposes. This indictment charged that Workman received this bribe on the 12th day of March, 1919. The second felony indictment was for unlawfully, feloniously, and corruptly demanding and receiving from one J. L. Richmond in said county on the 23d day of February, 1921, a sum of $800 in money, upon the understanding and agreement with said Richmond that he (Workman), as a member of the county court, would vote to sell to said Richmond, for the sum of $1,600, a certain steam shovel, which then belonged to the county court and which it proposed to sell. Workman appeared in court to answer these two indictments, and was placed under bond for his appearance at the trial, which was set for the 24th day of June, 1921, and the judge of the criminal court, Hon. John M. Anderson, then announced in open court that he expected to try Workman on the charges of felony in said indictments on that date.

Conceiving that the facts and allegations charged in these indictments did not constitute a felony under the statute, Workman petitioned for and obtained rules in prohibition against the judge of the criminal court to show cause why he should not be prohibited from proceeding to try the petitioner upon the indictments for felony. To the rule in prohibition the judge appeared by counsel, demurred to the petition filed, and moved to quash the rule issued thereon because the facts alleged in the petition were not sufficient to warrant the writ as prayed for, and for answer says that as judge of the criminal court he has jurisdiction to try and determine the matters alleged in the indictments.

[1] If the facts charged in these indictments do not constitute felony under the law, then the criminal court has no right or jurisdiction to try Workman for a felony, and, as we understand it, the petitioner seeks only to prohibit the trial of the felony charge. At common law all forms of bribery, except bribery of a judge in relation to a cause pending before him, where misdemeanors to be visited with imprisonment and fine. Bishop's New Criminal Law, vol. 2, § 87. In Virginia, at the time of the formation of this state, it was a misdemeanor for any executive, legislative, or judicial officer to corruptly accept a bribe, punished by being confined in jail for one year, and by being fined not exceeding $1,000, forfeiture of his office, and also being forever incapable of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under that state. This provision is found in the Code of Virginia of 1860, in chapter 194, and was adopted by this state, and is now section 5 of chapter 147, of the Code of 1918 (Code 1913, § 5248). This statute of Virginia, adopted by this state at its formation, continued as the law for punishing the crime of bribery by any executive, legislative, or judicial officer.

er until after the adoption of the Constitution of 1872. By section 45 of article 6 of that Constitution, the Legislature was directed, at its first session after the adoption of the Constitution, to provide by law for the punishment by imprisonment in the penitentiary of any person who shall bribe, or attempt to bribe, any executive or judicial officer of the state or any member of the Legislature in order to influence him in the performance of any of his official or public duties; and also to provide by law for the punishment by imprisonment in the penitentiary of any of said officers or any member of the Legislature who shall demand or receive from any corporation, company, or person any money, testimonial, or other valuable thing for the performance of his official or public duties, or for refusing or failing to perform the same, or for any vote or influence a member of the Legislature may give or withhold as such member, etc. In pursuance of the mandate of the Constitution as above set out, the Legislature of 1873, c. 75, carried into effect this constitutional requirement, making it a felony for bribing, or attempting to bribe, any executive or judicial officer of this state, or any member of the Legislature, and made it a felony for any executive or judicial officer of the state, or any member of the Legislature, to demand or receive from any corporation, company, or person any money, testimonial, or other valuable thing for the performance of his official or public duties or for refusing or failing to perform the same. These provisions of chapter 75 of the Acts of 1872-73 are now found as sections 5a(1), 5a(2), 5a(3), and 5a(4) of chapter 147 of the Code of 1918 (Code 1913, §§ 5249-5252). It is under section 5a(3) (section 5251) that Workman is indicted for a felony. This is the only section of the bribery statutes under which he could be indicted for a felony, and reads:

"That if any executive or judicial officer of this state shall demand or receive from any corporation, company or person, any money, testimonial, or other valuable thing, for the performance of his official or public duties, or for refusing or failing to perform the same, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for not less than five years, nor more than ten years; and shall, moreover, be forever disqualified from holding any office or position of honor, trust or profit in this state."

It is insisted by the Attorney General and counsel for the state that Workman, as commissioner of the county court, is an executive or judicial officer within the meaning of this section. It is unnecessary to decide to what division of powers a county court belongs. Some of their duties are judicial or quasi judicial, as when they sit to try election contests. Brazie v. Commissioners, 25 W. Va. 213; Arkle v. Board of Commissioners, 41 W.

Va. 471, 23 S. E. 804; Fleming v. Commissioners, 31 W. Va. 608, 8 S. E. 267. The majority of their duties are ministerial or executive, often involving discretion. It is sufficient to say that the acts or duty of the commissioner in the performance of which the indictment charges he received and accepted a bribe are ministerial or executive.

But does a commissioner of the county court fall within the designation of an executive officer of the state? Is he an officer of the state? Is he not an officer of the county? The statute under which the felony indictments are returned include executive or judicial officers of the state, using the same language and designating the same officers in the section of the Constitution which directed that such law be passed. These officers are placed in the same class as members of the Legislature and are subject to the same degree of punishment. See section 5a(4), c. 147, Code (Code 1913, § 5251). It was evidently the purpose of the framers of the Constitution of 1872 to raise the punishment of the crime of bribery from a misdemeanor to a felony for certain designated officers (officers of the state), but not to raise it for every executive, legislative, or judicial officer. We must give some significance to the words "of this state" following the word officer in the above-quoted statute. Unless an executive or judicial officer of the state is distinguished from those of a county or municipality, then bribery of a constable would be equal to bribery of a governor, and bribery of a police judge to that of a circuit or Supreme Court judge and the penalty the same. We are of the opinion that the framers of the Constitution of 1872 and the Legislature of that year and the following year clearly intended a distinction between the executive and judicial officers of the state and the executive and judicial officers of the counties, districts, and municipalities, and to take these state officers out of the operation and effect of the then existent statute adopted from the laws of the mother state (now section 5, c. 147, of the Code), which makes it a misdemeanor for any executive, legislative, or judicial officer to take a bribe. It will be observed by inspection of chapter 75, Acts 1872-73, that there is no reference therein to the misdemeanor bribery statute, then appearing in the Code of 1868 as section 5 of chapter 147. It is not an amendment to or repeal in terms of that or any other statute. It is new and independent legislation to carry into effect the provisions of section 45, art. 6 of the Constitution. If it be a repeal of the then existing misdemeanor bribery statute, it is only by implication; and repeals by implication are never favored and will never be indulged if there is any other reasonable construction. 25 R. C. L. p. 918; Lewis Sutherland Stat. Construction (2d. Ed.) vol. 1, § 247.

ture, these two acts must be considered in pari materia, and effect given to each, if there be any reasonable construction which will permit it. If every officer, either executive or judicial, who accepts a bribe, is to be punished as for a felony, then the misdemeanor act is entirely repealed in so far as executive and judicial officers are concerned. Members of the Legislature who receive bribes are subject to punishment for a felony under section 4, c. 75, Acts 1872-73 (now section 5a(4) of chapter 147, Code [Code 1913, § 5252]); and if section 5, c. 147, Code, has been repealed, then there would be no statutory punishment for any other legislative officer, for instance a member of town or city council who has power to make laws for the government of the town or city. Clearly section 5a(4) does not undertake to include all legislative officers. It applies solely to "members of the Legislature." Then so far as legislative officers are concerned, except members of the Legislature, section 5 is not repealed; and to hold that section 5 is repealed so far as executive and judicial officers are concerned by section 5a(3) would result in making a town councilman guilty of a misdemeanor for accepting a bribe, while a police officer of the same town, or a justice of the peace, would be guilty of a felony for the same offense—a rather anomalous distinction and result, which we do not think was intended by the lawmaking power.

Moreover, these statutes under consideration are penal, and it is a firmly settled rule that penal statutes must be strictly construed. "They will not be construed to include anything beyond their letter, even though within their spirit, and nothing can be added to them by inference or intend-ment." 25 R. C. L. p. 1081. See, also, Lewis Sutherland Stat. Construction (2d Ed.) vol. 2, §§ 337, 520-527. Every word and phrase must be given some significance and meaning; and the phrase "any executive or judicial officer of this state," as found in section 5a(3), which inflicts punishment for a felony, is quite different from "any executive or judicial officer," as found in section 5, which inflicts the misdemeanor penalty. The phrase "of this state" qualifies the preceding words, and is equivalent to state executive and judicial officers. This construction is impelled in view of the constitutional mandate and the preceding legislation.

[2] Considering these sections together, we hold that the construction to be given to section 5a(3) makes it apply only to executive or judicial officers of the state, such as the Governor, Attorney General, members of the public service commission, commissioner of banking, and like officers, whose powers or duties extend over the state, whether executive or judicial, and does not apply to executive or judicial officers generally and indiscriminately. Thus we follow the well-settled rules of statutory construction, and give life and vigor to each of these two acts of the Legislature, which, on first impression, may seem to conflict. From what we have said it follows that the petitioner, D. F. Workman, is not guilty of a felony under the facts charged in the indictments, and that the criminal court of Raleigh county is without jurisdiction to try him thereon as for a felony. Whether or not he can be tried on these indictments for a misdemeanor is a question which is not presented to us in this proceeding. The writ of prohibition will issue.

Writ of prohibition awarded.

SNODY v. ANDERSON. (No. 367.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 14, 1921.)

1. Executors and administrators \S 451(4)—Verdict for plaintiff on account for services not inconsistent with verdict against her on another account.

Where plaintiff in her first cause of action sought to recover for services rendered under a promise that compensation would be made therefor by will, and in her third cause of action to recover for such services independent of the promise to pay by will, though repeating the allegations of the first cause of action, evidently to show that the services were rendered in expectation of pay, a jury finding against her on the first cause of action was not inconsistent with a finding in her favor on the third cause of action.

2. Trial \S 343—Verdict to be interpreted with reference to pleadings, evidence, and charge.

A verdict will be interpreted by reference to the pleadings, the facts in evidence, and the charge of the court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Surry County; Long, Judge.

Action by Christina Snody against William Anderson, administrator of W. A. Snody. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The action is to recover for value of services rendered by plaintiff to intestate for 35 years or more prior to latter's death, of the alleged value of $4,000. The first cause of action is on the allegation that these services were under a promise and assurance given to plaintiff that the intestate would provide compensation for plaintiff in his last will and testament. Second cause of action, alleging services, and that intestate would compensate plaintiff therefor by devise of a certain piece of land. Third cause of action was for value of services.

Plaintiff offered evidence tending to prove extent of services, and their value, and under an assurance of compensation, and that intestate had died a short time before suit brought, and failed to make any provision by will or otherwise for compensation. There was denial of liability on part of administrator, and plea of statute of limitations, with evidence tending to show that said services were not given or received in expectation of pay, and were not worth anything over and above plaintiff's support. The cause was submitted and verdict rendered on the following issues:

"Did the plaintiff, at the request of W. A. Snody, defendant's intestate, go to intestate's home, and render services as alleged in the complaint in plaintiff's cause of action, with the mutual understanding between plaintiff and defendant's intestate that the intestate would provide compensation for such services in his last will and testament?

"Answer: No.

"(2) If so, what were such services reasonably worth?

"(3) Did plaintiff render to the defendant's intestate services as alleged in plaintiff's third cause of action?

"Answer: Yes.

"(4) If so, what were such services reasonably worth?

"Answer: Twelve hundred dollars.

"(5) Is plaintiff's cause of action barred by the statute of limitations?

"Answer: No."

Judgment on the verdict for plaintiff, and defendant excepted and appealed.

Folger, Jackson & Folger, of Mt. Airy, for appellant.

E. C. Bivens and Carter & Carter, all of Mt. Airy, for appellee.

HOKE, J. On perusal and proper consideration of the case on appeal, it appears that the charge of the court is comprehensive, clear, and in accord with our decisions on the questions presented; that the jury in the third cause of action have rendered a verdict for the value of the services within the statutory period of 8 years; and we find nothing in the record that would justify the court in disturbing the results of the trial.

[1] The court is not impressed with the position that the finding in the first cause of action is inconsistent with the verdict in the third. It is true that in stating the third cause of action the pleader reaffirmed the allegations of the first as to the assurance of a provision by the last will and testament, but this was evidently only by way of averment that the services were given and received in expectation of pay, and it is clear that the third cause of action was intended as a demand for services and their value, disconnected with the averment of compensation by last will and testament. The court so interpreted the pleadings, and accordingly charged the jury that, in considering the issues in the third cause of action, they would only allow for services rendered within the statutory limitation of 8 years.

[2] It is recognized that a verdict will be interpreted by reference to the pleadings, the facts in evidence, and the charge of the court. Reynolds v. Express Co., 172 N. C. 487, 90 S. E. 510, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 1071. And, applying the principle, it is clear that by their verdict on the third cause of action the defendant has only been charged with the reasonable value of services rendered within the statutory period, and not otherwise. The other exceptions, also, are without merit.

There is no error, and the judgment on the verdict is affirmed.

STATE v. JOHNSON. (No. 498.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 7, 1921.)

1. Seduction §32—Prosecutrix must be "innocent" as well as "virtuous."

To convict one of seduction under promise of marriage under Code, § 1113, the prosecutrix must be innocent, as well as virtuous, and a widow who had illicit relations with her deceased husband before marriage was neither innocent nor virtuous, where she willingly surrendered her chastity to accused, prompted by her own lustful passions, or any other motive than that produced by accused's promise of marriage.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Innocence; Virtuous.]

2. Seduction §48—Whether prosecutrix was seduced held for jury.

In prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage, whether the illicit intercourse was induced by accused's promise of marriage or merely to gratify prosecutrix's lust held for the jury.

3. Seduction §32—One who has reformed may be innocent and virtuous.

An adulteress may reform and become innocent, and even virtuous, under Code, § 1113, punishing the crime of seduction under promise of marriage.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wilkes County; Ferguson, Judge.

Smith Johnson was convicted of seduction under promise of marriage, and appeals. New trial.

This was an indictment for seduction under promise of marriage. There was evidence tending to show that the prosecutrix, Darrie Ball, before the seduction charged in this case, had been seduced under promise of marriage by Thomas Ball. This she admitted. Ball afterwards married her, and they lived together as man and wife, but he did not marry her until she gave birth to a child, of which he was the father, she being at that time about 16 years of age. She had been married to Ball about 14 years, when he died, in January, 1916. She had five children by him including the one not born in wedlock. She was 30 years old when Ball died, and the defendant was 21 at that time. There was some evidence that he had never had anything to do with a woman in his life, and at the time of the death of prosecutrix's husband the defendant was going to see a young girl just across the mountain beyond the home of the prosecutrix. The defendant prior to the death of prosecutrix's husband, and afterwards until about one year ago, lived within sight and within less than one-half mile of her home.

There was evidence tending to show that the prosecutrix was seduced by the defendant under a promise of marriage, and, slight though it may have been, it was sufficient to be submitted to the jury. She confessed to the jury that she submitted to the defendant "partly because she loved him and partly because she knew that it would be good to her." There was considerable testimony, which was, more or less to the same effect. There also was further testimony in defendant's behalf tending to show that soon after the death of the husband and prior to July, 1916, prosecutrix began meeting the defendant along the road near the home of defendant and would walk with him and tease him about the girls and invite him to come and see her. As defendant would pass the home of prosecutrix's brother going to see his girl across the mountain, she would be there, and her brother would hitch his ox to the wagon and drive the defendant to see his girl, and the prosecutrix would go along, and come back in the same wagon, and leave defendant at the home of his girl. Later they would carry him in the wagon to visit their homes. Some time during the month of July, 1916, at the invitation of the prosecutrix, the defendant went to her home, and they sat around the fireplace until the children went to bed. After they sat there for a while, the prosecutrix moved her chair over close to defendant, put her arms around his neck, and said, "I have been loving you for a good while, and you did not find it out until a few days ago." She hugged and kissed him, and put her hands upon him in such a way as to excite his sexual passions. At this he asked her to have intercourse with him, she consented, and they had intercourse there in a chair. After the intercourse, they talked about the girl the defendant was going to see, and she asked defendant when he and the girl were going to marry, after which defendant went home. Nothing was said about their marrying. Defendant went to see prosecutrix often afterwards, and often had sexual intercourse with her up to some time before the baby was born on July 16, 1918. Defendant and prosecutrix had said nothing about marrying until defendant was drafted into the United States army for service overseas, and after the child was born and prior to July 21, 1918, when defendant left for the camps. At this time defendant went to see prosecutrix, she cried and complained to him that she was not able to raise the baby and begged defendant to marry her. Defendant promised her then if she would keep a decent house and conduct herself properly, until he returned from the army, that he would marry her, and this is the promise he referred to in the letters copied in the record. After defendant returned from the army he found that prosecutrix had not kept a clean house as she had promised to do and prosecutrix asked him to try her again and she would keep the boys away. Defendant consented to do so, all of her promises she failed to keep, and all relations were broken off, and the defendant married December 5, 1920, and was arrested in this action in January, 1921.

The court charged the jury among other things not related to this instruction, as follows:

"If you find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the prosecutrix never had sexual intercourse with any man except her husband and the defendant, and if you should further find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that she only had sexual intercourse with her husband before she was married after the engagement between her and her husband to be married, and it was at his solicitation after the said engagement and promise of marriage and before their marriage, and if you should further find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant and the prosecutrix were engaged to be married, and that the defendant solicited her to have intercourse with him, promising to marry her, and she yielded to him because she trusted him and because he promised to marry her, she would be in the eyes of the law an innocent and virtuous woman."

The court refused to give the following instruction requested by the defendant:

"(1) The court charges you that an innocent and virtuous woman under the law of this state is a woman who had never had actual illicit sexual intercourse with any man. The court further charges you that, if you should find from the testimony that the prosecutrix permitted her husband to have sexual intercourse with her prior to their marriage, then the court charges you that she would not be an innocent and virtuous woman, and your verdict in this case, if you so find, will be not guilty."

"(2) If you find from the testimony that the prosecutrix permitted her husband prior to their marriage to have sexual intercourse with her, that said sexual intercourse was illicit, notwithstanding you further find that the same was produced by seduction under promise of marriage, as the seduction under such a promise does not render sexual intercourse legal (except as between the prosecutrix and her husband), but to all the rest of the world it was illicit sexual intercourse, and the defendant would not be guilty."

Defendant duly excepted to the instruction given and to the refusal of those requested.

There was a verdict of guilty, and from the judgment thereon defendant appealed to this court, after reserving his exceptions.

J. A. Rousseau, of North Wilkesboro, and Chas. G. Gilreath, of Wilkesboro, for appellant.

James S. Manning, Atty. Gen., and Frank Nash, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The evidence in this case is not only repulsive, but filthy, in some of its parts, but we are to determine upon the legal guilt of the defendant, or, in other words and speaking more accurately, whether he has been legally tried below. We do not think that he has been, and will proceed now to state our reasons for so thinking. The instruction above set forth contains a proposition of law which cannot be sustained, and it no doubt caused the defendant's conviction. We know of no case in this state which decides that a woman would be innocent and virtuous under the facts and circumstances detailed by the judge therein. If a woman commits adultery with a man simply because she is solicited to do so, even upon the promise of marriage, she is to be pitied, but is not "innocent and virtuous" within the meaning of the statute upon which this prosecution is based. If she yielded to temptation solely because of the promise, and not to gratify her lustful passions, she is still an adulteress, and cannot be said in the language of this court, to be a woman who never had had actual sexual intercourse with a man. She may be virtuous, but not innocent, within the meaning of the statute, as is shown so clearly by Justice Davis in State v. Ferguson, 107 N. C. 841, 12 S. E. 574. It is said in that case, without quoting literally, that the woman must be virtuous—that is, pure and chaste—as well as innocent. The purpose of this statute is to protect innocent and virtuous women against wicked and designing men, who know that one of the most potent of all seductive arts is to win love and confidence by promising love and marriage. In section 1113 of the Code the word "innocent" is used, which Justice Ruffin defines, in State v. McDaniel, 84 N. C. 805, as meaning "a pure woman—one whose character," to use the language of the preamble of the statute, "is unsullied." In State v. Davis, 92 N. C. 764, "an innocent woman," within the meaning of that section, is defined to be "one who had never had actual illicit intercourse with a man," and mere lasciviousness and the permission of liberties by men are not contemplated by the statute; and this definition of the words, "an innocent woman," has been followed in State v. Horton, 100 N. C. 447, 6 S. E. 238, 6 Am. St. Rep. 613, in construing the word "innocent" in the statute now under review. But the woman must not only be "innocent," but "virtuous." What force, if any, does the word "virtuous" impart to the act? In State v. Grigg, 104 N. C. 882, 10 S. E. 684, it is said, citing State v. Aldridge, 86 N. C. 680, that a woman who at some time in her life has made a "slip in her virtue" is entitled to the protection of section 1113 of the Code, if she is "chaste and virtuous" when the slanderous words are uttered. There is a manifest reason why the words "an innocent woman" in section 1113 of the Code, and "innocent and unprotected woman" in section 3763, should be construed to mean innocent of illicit sexual intercourse, as affecting her reputation when the slanderous words are spoken, for the purpose of those sections is to protect women who, however imprudent they may have been in other respects, have not so far "stooped to folly" as to surrender their chastity and become incontinent, or who have regained their characters for innocence and chastity if a "slip has been made," from "the wanton and malicious slander" of persons who may attempt to destroy their reputations and blast and ruin their good names. But the act of 1885, recognizing the frailty of man as well as woman, superadds to the word "innocent" the word "virtuous," and before it will condemn and punish the man, who may be seducible as well as seductive, requires that it shall be made to appear that the woman was herself "innocent and virtuous," and that the seduction was compassed by winning her confidence and love under the false and alluring means of a promise of marriage; but, if she willingly surrenders her chastity, prompted by her own lustful passions, or any other motive than that that produced by a promise of marriage, she is in pari delicto, and there is no crime under the statute. She must not only be innocent, but virtuous—that is, chaste and pure—and if such a woman yields under the promise of marriage to the "studied, sly, ensnaring art, * * * dissembling smooth," of the seducer and is betrayed, she deserves sympathy and charity; and he not only deserves the "curse" of all who love honor and virtue, but the severest penalties of the law. The woman, however, must be "virtuous" as well as "innocent," and this implies something more in her conduct than mere innocence of illicit sexual intercourse. If she willingly submitted to his embraces, the mere promise of marriage would not make it seduction. People v. Clark, 33 Mich. 117. And her evidence must be supported. No such proviso is to be found in sections 1113 and 3763. For illustration, there is no evidence that Potiphar's wife ever had illicit sexual intercourse with any one, and yet the idea of a "virtuous woman" would hardly be suggested by her name.

[2, 3] This definition of the words has been the settled and fully accepted one ever since the decision in State v. Ferguson, supra, and has been adopted and followed in several more recent cases. State v. Horton, 100 N. C. 443, 6 S. E. 238, 6 Am. St. Rep. 613; State v. Crowell, 116 N. C. 1052, 21 S. E. 502; State v. Whitley, 141 N. C. 826, 53 S. E. 820; State v. Ring, 142 N. C. 596, 55 S. E. 194, 115 Am. St. Rep. 759; State v. Kincaid, 142 N. C. 657, 55 S. E. 647; State v. Raynor, 145 N. C. 472, 59 S. E. 344; State v. Maloney, 154 N. C. 200, 69 S. E. 786; State v. Cooke, 176 N. C. 731, 97 S. E. 171; State v. Pace, 159 N. C. 462, 74 S. E. 1018; State v. Cline, 170 N. C. 751, 87 S. E. 106; State v. Moody, 172 N. C. 967, 90 S. E. 900; State v. Fulcher, 176 N. C. 724, 97 S. E. 2. If we are still to follow the opinion of Justice Davis, which has always guided us in cases such as this one, the charge of the court cannot be sustained. State v. Crowell, 116 N. C. 1052, 21 S. E. 502 (opinion by the present Chief Justice); for he told the jury that, notwithstanding that the prosecutrix (Darrie Ball) had committed adultery with Thomas Ball (by whom she had a child) before they were married, the jury should find that she was both an innocent and a virtuous woman. And the judge committed the same error in a more pronounced way, if anything, when he refused the clear-cut requests of the defendant for instruction as to this feature of the case. The first prayer for instructions omitted the element of seduction, and defendant was entitled to have the jury charged as requested, because the defendant was not concluded by the statement of the prosecutrix that the illicit intercourse was induced by his promises of marriage. It was for the jury to say whether it was merely to gratify her lust or was induced by his promise, and there was evidence in this case, and, too, some strong evidence, that she was a very lustful woman, and enough to justify the jury in finding that she did not require a promise to overcome the longing of her lewd nature or her lascivious desires, or even yearnings. But we may pause here to state that on the next trial it will be proper for the court to instruct the jury that, if the prosecutrix had committed adultery with the man who afterwards became her husband, even though it was often repeated before marriage, yet if, after she thus fell, she married her lover and was always faithful to him, and ever after the first act of adultery with him was innocent and virtuous—that is, had not had sexual intercourse with any man—until the defendant seduced her under promise of marriage, if he did such a thing, then that she would be an innocent woman, and, if she was also chaste and pure in the sense above defined, she also would be a virtuous woman within the meaning of the statute. An adulteress may reform and become innocent, and even virtuous, and, if this woman has done so, the statute protects her just as much as if she had never fallen but had always walked in the straight and narrow way of spotless innocence, virtue, and chastity, not even permitting undue familiarity from any man, and especially the debaucher. This was clearly decided in State v. Ferguson, supra, and some of the other cases above cited have carefully followed it.

The statute was passed to guard and protect the innocent and virtuous woman, and not those who seek only to gratify their own lustful desires and have no proper regard for the sacredness and purity of the marriage promise, and do not even wait for it, before yielding their persons to the embraces of evil-minded men. In such a case the woman is considered to be as bad as he is, and beyond the pale of the law's protection under this statute.

We have not overlooked the fact of the disparity in the ages of this woman and the defendant, she being nine years his senior, and that he contends, and offered evidence to prove, that he was the seduced, and not the seducer. She was, by her own evidence, of a most lascivious disposition, and seemed to have lured this young man from the path of virtue by constantly "vamping" him, if the testimony be true, and even going to the length of saying, unblushingly, and to her open shame, that in the perpetration of the act itself "she preferred the woods to the porch."

There was error in the respects indicated, for which another trial is necessary.

New trial.

MCCULLOUGH v. SCOTT et al., State Board of Accountancy. (No. 443.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 30, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error ¶329—Attorney General made a complainant on appeal.

Though the Supreme Court will not allow an amendment making an additional party plaintiff where the result will be to deprive defendants of the benefit of a ground of demurrer below, a motion to make the Attorney General a complainant in an action by a certified public accountant to enjoin the State Board of Accountancy from examining applicants for certificates beyond the state held not to be denied.

2. Attorney General ¶7—May maintain suit to enjoin ultra vires act by State Board of Accountancy.

Under Code, § 965, authorizing pleading by making proper parties, and C. S. § 1143, specifying the nature of suits and proceedings which the Attorney General may conduct on his own information or on complaint of a private party, he may maintain, or be a complainant in, an action by a certified public accountant to enjoin the State Board of Accountancy from examining applicants for certificates beyond the state.

3. Appeal and error ¶917(2)—On demurrer, court can consider only facts alleged in complaint, which are taken as admitted.

In dealing with an overruled demurrer, the Supreme Court can consider only the facts alleged in the complaint, which are to be taken as admitted, and no extraneous matter.

4. States ¶45—Members of State Board of Accountancy are state officers.

Members of the State Board of Accountancy, created by Laws 1913, c. 157 (C. S. §§ 7008-7024), are state officers.

5. States ¶66—Jurisdiction of "state officers" only coextensive with territory of state.

The jurisdiction of "state officers," who are those officers whose duties concern the state at large or the general public, though exercised within defined limits, and to whom are delegated the exercise of a portion of the sovereign power of the state, is only co-extensive with the territory of the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, State Officer.]

6. Officers ¶103 — "Jurisdiction" includes territory as well as subject-matter.

The word "jurisdiction" embraces not only the subject-matter coming within the powers of officials, but also the territory within which such powers are to be exercised.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Jurisdiction.]

7. Officers ¶103—Official power does not accompany person beyond bounds of sovereignty which conferred it.

Official power cannot accompany the person beyond the bounds of the sovereignty which has conferred it.

8. Licenses ¶22—Examination of applicants for certificates as public accountants must be within the state; "quasi judicial" power; "judicial action."

Examination of applicants for certificates as public accountants under C. S. §§ 7008-7024, section 7016 of which authorizes the State Board of Accountancy to hold such examinations "at such places as it may designate," is not a mere ministerial duty, such as might be delegated to others, but a "judicial action" or "quasi judicial" power required to be performed by the members of the Board themselves, the submission and supervision of the holding of the examination and the determination of the qualifications of applicants constituting one official act requiring judgment and discretion, and, the performance of such act being a function of government designed to benefit the people of the state, the Board exceeds its jurisdiction in going beyond the boundaries of the state to perform it.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Judicial Action; Judicial Power.]

9. Statutes \Leftrightarrow 225—Construed in relation to other laws on same, cognate, or even different subjects.

A statute is to be construed in its relation to other laws as part of a general and uniform system of jurisprudence in connection with other statutes on the same or cognate subjects, or even on different subjects.

10. Statutes \Leftrightarrow 183—Construed consistently with general principles of law, the spirit prevailing over letter.

Where the language of a statute is of doubtful meaning or adherence to the strict letter would lead to injustice, the court gives a reasonable construction consistent with the general principles of law; the spirit or reason of the law prevailing over its letter.

11. Statutes \Leftrightarrow 194—Meaning of general terms restrained by evident object and general language construed to admit implied exceptions.

The meaning of general terms in a statute may be restrained by the evident object or purpose to be attained and general language construed to admit implied exceptions in order to accomplish what was manifestly intended.

12. Statutes \Leftrightarrow 203—Court may adopt construction from analogous provisions and thus supply an omission.

Where ordinary interpretation leads to consequences so dangerous and absurd that they could never have been intended, the court may adopt a construction from analogous provisions and thus supply an omission.

13. Statutes \Leftrightarrow 1—Not effective beyond territorial limits of sovereignty from which authority derived.

As a general rule, no law has any effect of its own force beyond the territorial limits of the sovereignty from which its authority is derived, every statute being prima facie confined in its operation to the persons, property, rights, or contracts which are within the territorial jurisdiction of the Legislature which enacted it.

14. Officers \Leftrightarrow 103—Official acts to be done beyond state's limits must be by express legislative permission.

Though the Legislature may require certain official acts to be done beyond the state's limits, such as taking depositions of witnesses, acknowledgments of deeds, etc., such acts are done by its express permission and cannot be implied.

15. Evidence \Leftrightarrow 10(2)—Court on admitted facts may determine whether certain official acts are for public or mere private convenience.

In an action to enjoin the State Board of Accountancy of North Carolina from examining applicants for certificates in Washington, D. C., on the ground it exceeded its jurisdiction under C. S. §§ 7008-7024, where defendants claimed they proposed to give such examination at the solicitation and for the convenience of applicants living in and near Washington, but did not deny that some applicants were going to Washington from North Carolina, the Supreme Court may judge for itself of the relative convenience of Washington and the city of Raleigh for applicants already in North Carolina, and whether examination outside the state is for public interest or personal interest of applicants.

16. Constitutional law \Leftrightarrow 12—Exercise of granted power limited to means expressly given.

When the means for the exercise of a granted power are given, no other or different means can be implied as being more effective or convenient.

17. Injunction \Leftrightarrow 74—Equity may enjoin acts of judicial and quasi judicial officers.

When judicial and quasi judicial officers exceed their jurisdiction or abuse their discretion, their action is subject to review by the courts, which may enforce or enjoin their act.

18. Officers \Leftrightarrow 119—Exercise of discretion may be reviewed by the courts.

The exercise of discretionary power is subject to review by the courts where it has violated some rule of public policy, is illegal, or in excess of jurisdiction.

19. Constitutional law \Leftrightarrow 81—Act requiring examination of applicants for certificates as public accountants lawful exercise of police power.

C. S. §§ 7008-7024, creating the State Board of Accountancy and requiring the examination of applicants for certificates to practice such profession, is a lawful exercise of the state's police power to safeguard the public against incompetent accountants and to prevent unjust discrimination against accredited members of the profession who have met the conditions imposed by law in the manner prescribed.

20. Injunction \Leftrightarrow 75—Court may enjoin examination of applicants for certificates as public accountants outside state.

The Supreme Court, at the suit of a citizen or taxpayer, may enjoin the State Board of Accountancy from examining applicants for certificates beyond the state, though the Board, under C. S. § 7016, may hold such examination at such times and places as it may designate.

21. Injunction \Leftrightarrow 136(1)—Interlocutory injunction to preserve status quo until determination of controversy is generally proper.

When the parties are at issue concerning a right, it is generally proper to grant an interlocutory injunction to preserve the status quo pending the controversy, especially when the principal relief sought is in itself an injunction, as in the case of an action to enjoin the State Board of Accountancy from holding an examination of applicants for certificates outside the state.

22. Injunction \Leftrightarrow 21—Repetition of illegal official act will be enjoined though officers declare intention not to do so.

The court will enjoin the State Board of Accountancy from examining applicants for certificates outside the state in excess of its authority under C. S. §§ 7008-7024, though such an examination had been held; it being still possible for defendants to repeat such act, though they had declared their intention not to do so.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Ray, Judge.

Action by D. H. McCullough against George G. Scott and others, constituting the State Board of Accountancy. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. The Attorney General was made a party plaintiff in the Appellate Court. Reversed.

This action was brought by the plaintiff, who is a duly certified public accountant, to enjoin the defendants from exercising certain of their duties beyond the limits of the state, and, to be more exact, from examining applicants for licenses and certificates to practice, as public accountants, beyond the state and in the city of Washington, D. C.

The case was tried below on demurrer to the complaint and the motion to vacate a restraining order theretofore granted. The court sustained the demurrer and vacated the restraining order, and refused a preliminary injunction to the final hearing. Plaintiff appealed.

Cochran & Beam and Carrie L. McLean, all of Charlotte, for appellant.

E. R. Preston, of Charlotte, and James A. Lockhart, of Wadesboro, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). The State Board of Accountancy was created by a special act of the Legislature of 1913, the act being chapter 157 of the Public Laws of 1913, brought forward in the Consolidated Statutes as chapter 116, §§ 7008 to 7024, inclusive. The function of this Board is to examine applicants and grant certificates, as certified public accountants of the state of North Carolina, to those giving evidence by such examination that they are qualified. The statute provides (C. S. 7010) that—

"The Board shall determine the qualifications of persons applying for certificates under this chapter, and make rules for the examination of applicants and the issue of certificates herein provided."

The statute further provides (C. S. 7016):

"The examination shall be held as often as may be necessary in the opinion of the Board, and at such times and places as it may designate, but not less frequently than in each calendar year."

[1] Before entering upon a discussion of the merits, we will first consider a preliminary question based upon the motion of the plaintiff in this court to make the Attorney General a party as coplaintiff, so that the title of the case shall be "The State, on the Relation of the Attorney General and D. H. McCullough," as plaintiffs, against the present defendants. The defendants resist the granting of this motion on the ground that the amendment here will deprive them of the benefit of their second ground of demurrer taken below, that plaintiff had no right to bring this action, and that this court will not allow an amendment, when such a result will follow. This is true generally, as the cases cited by the defendants show. West v. Railway, 140 N. C. 620, 53 S. E. 477, 6 Ann. Cas. 360; Bonner v. Statesbury, 139 N. C. 3, 51 S. E. 781; Wilson v. Pearson, 102 N. C. 290, 9 S. E. 707; Grant v. Rogers, 94 N. C. 755. And they further contend that it would substitute a new cause of action. If we could see that such would be the result, and that defendants would be prejudiced thereby, we might deny the motion; but it does not so appear to us. The plaintiff has some interest in the cause of action, as a member of the class for whose benefit this law was enacted, and is subject to the general supervision of its Board and its official bodies, and also he has such interest as a citizen and taxpayer, in seeing that funds, in which the public have an interest, should not be diverted to an illegal purpose or squandered for unauthorized purposes, and more especially he has an interest in requiring that funds raised for the support of this quasi public body, they being trustees of the class of which he is a member, should not be unlawfully expended by the Board, but should be held by it to subserve the special objects for which it was created.

[2] But, however this may be, and it is not necessary that we should definitely decide it, this court has allowed the amendments requested, which are in the interest of a hearing of the case upon its real merits, and in accordance with, at least, one of our former decisions, when a similar amendment was ordered here. Fort v. Boone, 114 N. C. 176, 19 S. E. 632 (op. by the present Chief Justice). There it was held, as the syllabus of the case shows, that where an action was brought on the official bond of a clerk of the superior court in the name of the parties injured by a breach thereof, it was not error in the court below to permit an amendment of the summons by the insertion of the words "The State on Relation of" after the pleadings were filed. The court, in the opinion, says with respect to this holding:

"We may note, however, that the exception that the judge allowed the summons to be amended by adding the words 'State on Relation of' before the name of plaintiff was not error. Maggett v. Roberts, 108 N. C. 174. It might have even been allowed after verdict (Brown v. Mitchell, 102 N. C. 347), or, indeed, in this court"—citing Hodge v. Railroad, 108 N. C. 24, 26, 12 S. E. 1041; Grant v. Rogers, 94 N. C. 755; Tyrrel v. Simmons, 48 N. C. 187; Code, § 965.

We then have a case in the name of the state, upon the relation of its Attorney General and D. H. McCullough, against the defendants, to enjoin the violation by the latter of the law creating them, wherein it is alleged that they have committed an ultra vires act, and to the extent that, if they may pay their expenses in the doing of the alleged unlawful act, they will misapply the trust fund established by the statute for the lawful costs and expenses of the Board, and thereby are diminishing the amount which should go into the public treasury by the terms of the law, which provides in Consol. Statutes, § 7019, that after paying expenses, "any surplus arising shall, at the end of each year, be deposited by the treasurer of the Board with the state treasurer to the credit of the general fund." The Consol. Statutes, § 1143, entitled "Actions by the Attorney General to Prevent Ultra Vires Acts" by corporations, provides:

"In the following cases the Attorney General may, in the name of the state, upon his own information, or upon the complaint of a private party, bring an action against the offending parties for the purpose of—

"1. Restraining by injunction a corporation from assuming or exercising any franchise or transacting any business not allowed by its charter.

"2. Restraining any person from exercising corporate franchises not granted.

"3. Bringing directors, managers, and officers of a corporation, or the trustees of funds given for a public or charitable purpose, to an account for the management and disposition of the property confided to their care.

"4. Removing such officers or trustees upon proof of gross misconduct.

"5. Securing, for the benefit of all interested, the said property or funds.

"6. Setting aside and restraining improper alienations of the said property or funds.

"7. Generally compelling the faithful performance of duty and preventing all fraudulent practices, embezzlement, and waste."

—to restrain corporations from ultra vires acts, and which was applicable where purpose was not to dissolve corporation, as under section 1187, but to preserve it in its useful functions without abuse of powers. Atty. Gen. v. R. R., 28 N. C. 456. This section embodies provisions of Rev. Code, c. 26, § 28; Rev. Statutes, c. 26, § 10; Acts of 1831, c. 24, § 5—which authorized injunction proceedings in a court of equity.

The authority, given by statute, as approved by this court, would seem to be ample justification for granting the relief prayed for by plaintiff in this action. The Attorney General is doing only what the statute permits him to do in the interest of the public, of his own motion, or upon the complaint of a private party.

[8] Having disposed of this preliminary question, we proceed to consider the case upon its merits. It must be steadily kept in mind that we are now dealing with an overruled demurrer, and we can consider only the facts alleged in the complaint (which are to be taken as admitted), and no extraneous matter. Hartsfield v. Bryan, 177 N. C. 166, 98 S. E. 379; Brewer v. Wynne, 154 N. C. 467, 70 S. E. 947; Wood v. Kincaid, 144 N. C. 393, 57 S. E. 4.

[4] We are firmly convinced that the statute, under which the defendants professed to hold this examination, does not authorize them to perform their duties, and exercise their functions, outside the state, and that, on the contrary, it requires them to confine their activities strictly within its limits. We do not suppose, for an instant, it will be controverted that defendants are public officers. The Board created by the act is, at least, a quasi public corporation, required to discharge certain public duties and responsibilities to the state and bound for their proper and legal performance, and also for the care and administration of the funds they handle, the surplus of which, not used for defraying the Board's expenses, being required to be deposited in the state treasury. In Groves v. Barden, 169 N. C. 8, 84 S. E. 1042, L. R. A. 1917A, 228, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 316, our court defines the word "officers," and refers with approval to the case of Attorney General v. Tillinghast, 17 Ann. Cas. 452. These cases, with the authorities therein collected, and the later authorities given in the notes to Groves v. Barden (169 N. C. 8, 84 S. E. 1042, L. R. A. 1917A, 228) in Ann. Cas. 1917B, p. 316, furnish us the indicia by which we determine whether a given position is or is not an "office." Applying to the State Board of Accountancy the tests laid down in the cases, we find that the Board was directly created by the Legislature; the qualifications of its members are prescribed by law; all to be residents of the state, three to be actively engaged as certified public accountants of this state, one to be a lawyer of the state in good standing; the treasurer is required to give bond; the funds belong to the state after the expenses of the officer are paid; there is intrusted to this Board some of the sovereign authority of the state, it being an arm of the state government; the duties are not merely clerical, or those of agents or servants, but are performed in the execution and administration of the law, in the exercise of power and authority bestowed by the law; they are appointed by the Governor; the people of the state at large are concerned in the performance of their official acts; their compensation is derived from fees fixed by law; they are not under contract with the state, either as to their duties or their compensation; the law fixes the duration of their term of office; such discretionary power is granted and such judgment required in the exercise of the functions for which the Board was created as to render the official acts of its members quasi judicial; the duties are continuing in their nature, i. e., they are to be regularly performed; and the duties pertaining to the office cannot be delegated to others. The certificates granted by the Board constitute a license to practice as certified public accountants within the state. The position held by each of the defendants complies with all the tests prescribed in State ex rel. Attorney General v. Noland Knight, 169 N. C. 333, 85 S. E. 418, L. R. A. 1915F, 898, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 517.

[5] In 22 R. C. L. 896, boards of education, boards of legal examiners, and boards of equalization of taxes are mentioned as among various well-known instances of boards of public officers. It is admitted that the jurisdiction of the Board is state-wide, and if the members are officers, they are therefore state officers. The plaintiff contends, and it is true, that the jurisdiction of state officers is only coextensive with the territory of the state from which they derive their powers. "It is apparent that in strictness a mere license or power conferred by statute is only coextensive with the sovereignty from which the license or power emanates." 17 R. C. L. 502. "State officers are those whose duties concern the state at large, or the general public, although exercised within defined limits, and to whom are delegated the exercise of a portion of the sovereign power of the state. They are in a general sense those whose powers and duties are coextensive with the state." 38 Cyc. 852. In State v. Hocker, 39 Fla. 477, 22 South. 721, 63 Am. St. Rep. 174, after reciting very fully the attributes necessary to constitute an officer, it was held that without any semblance of doubt the members of the board of legal examiners were state officers; the field for the exercise of whose jurisdiction, duties, and powers was coextensive only with the limits of the state.

[6] It cannot be said that "coextensive with state boundaries" means more than the words imply; that is so contradictory that the mere statement of it is seemingly absurd. The word "jurisdiction" embraces not only the subject-matter coming within the powers of officials, but also the territory within which the powers are to be exercised. State v. Magney, 52 Neb. 508, 72 N. W. 1006, 1008. The question as to jurisdiction must be considered with reference to the territory within which it is to be exercised. Konold v. Rio Grande W. Ry. Co., 16 Utah, 151, 51 Pac. 256. "Jurisdiction" is defined to be the "power to hear and determine causes." The hearing is as important a part of jurisdiction as the determining. The power of officials to act as fixed and limited by the place of performance is discussed in the case of Harris v. State, 72 Miss. 960, 18 South. 387, and particularly in the notes to the same case in 33 L. R. A. 85. While it is true that in most of the cases referred to in those notes some place for performance was designated in the statute, still in the case of Ex parte Branch, 63 Ala. 383, cited in this connection, it is said:

"If the law should not, however, appoint a place for the sitting of a court, it would doubtless rest in the power of the judge to appoint the time and place of the sitting; and the only limitation of the power would be, that the place should be within the territory of his jurisdiction."

In Ferebee v. Hinton, 102 N. C. 99, 8 S. E. 922, the clerk of the court of Camden county, N. C., went to Virginia, and took the examination and acknowledgment of the parties to a deed of trust on land in North Carolina, but did not write out his certificate and sign it until he returned to Camden county, N. C. The court said that—

"the deed was void as to the wife, if the clerk of the superior court of Camden county took her privy examination in the state of Virginia," cannot be denied, and "it is unnecessary to cite authority in support of such a plain proposition [as to the admissibility of the evidence]. As to the other point, it is equally clear that the clerk had no jurisdiction when he took the privy examination in the state of Virginia."

This case is cited with approval in Long v. Crews, 113 N. C. 256, 18 S. E. 499, in which the present Chief Justice wrote the opinion, and in which he says:

"In this state it is settled law that an acknowledgment of a deed by the husband and privy examination of the wife taken before a justice of the peace, commissioner or notary, is a judicial, or at least, a quasi judicial act, and if such officer is not authorized to take it, the probate * * * and registration are invalid against creditors and purchasers. * * * The principle has been since followed in Todd v. Outlaw, 79 N. C. 235; Duke v. Markham, 105 N. C. 131; and many other cases. * * * These were all cases where the registration and probate were insufficient because the acknowledgment was made before an officer, by reason of his locality, not authorized or acting outside of his local jurisdiction, and the ruling is sustained by ample authority elsewhere. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. 146, note 2, and 1 Devlin on Deeds, sections 487 and 488, with cases cited. * * * The acknowledgment is taken, so to speak, coram non iudice, and cannot authorize probate by the clerk and registration"—citing authorities.

Acts of a school officer must generally be performed at the times and places designated by law, or they will be invalid; and, generally speaking, they must be performed within the territory over which the officer's jurisdiction extends. 24 R. C. L. 578.

In Pardrige v. Morgenthau, 157 Ill. 395, 42 N. E. 74, the judge out of court and off the bench approved an appeal bond and directed it to be filed nunc pro tunc, and it was decided to be invalid. In Bear v. Cohen, 65 N. C. 511, it was held that a judge appointed by the Governor to hold court in Wilson and Craven counties did not have jurisdiction to act in cases pending in other counties of the district—specifically, to set aside an attachment in Wayne county. In State v. Jefferson, 68 N. C. 309, the judge left the court in Warren county before the jury agreed on a verdict, and went to his home in the adjoining county of Franklin, where he was advised by telegraph that the jury could not agree. He instructed the clerk by wire to discharge the jury and remand the prisoner. Discussing error in the exercise of power by the court (the validity of his act as affected by the place of its performance), it was held to be the duty of the judge that he should be personally present in court, and therefore his act was illegal, and the prisoner was entitled to his discharge. When in 1913 our Legislature enacted a curative statute validating probates and acknowledgments taken prior to 1913 by officers out of the county, or district, authorized by law, only such probates or acknowledgments were validated as had been taken within the state. Laws 1913, c. 125; C. S. 3336. In re Allison, 13 Colo. 525, 22 Pac. 820, 10 L. R. A. 790, 16 Am. St. Rep. 224, it was said that—

"No issue was made with the definition usually given, that a 'court' consists of 'persons officially assembled, under authority of law, at the appropriate time and place, for the administration of justice,' nor was it denied that the place of meeting was an important element in the definition."

[7, 8] It is elementary that when the law confers upon a person powers that he as a natural person does not possess, that power cannot accompany his person beyond the bounds of the sovereignty which has conferred the power. For example, letters testamentary or of administration have no legal effect beyond the territorial limits of the state in which they are granted. An executor or administrator cannot sue in his official capacity in the courts of any other state than that from which he derives his authority to act in virtue of the letters there granted to him, because his appointment stops at the boundary of the state which appointed him. 11 R. C. L. pp. 432-447. He must resort to ancillary administration in the other state. A state may have extraterritorial officers, such as commissioners to take acknowledgments of deed in other states and territories, but such cases are clearly exceptional. 22 R. C. L. 405. The same familiar principle that forbids court officials, executors, administrators, and guardians from acting in their official capacity beyond the state boundaries, is applied in the case of corporations. In the case of Miller v. Ewor, 27 Me. 509,

46 Am. Dec. 619, it was held that a general clause in a charter authorizing certain persons to call the first meeting of a corporation at such time and place as they think proper does not authorize them to call the meeting at a place without the state. Numerous cases may be cited to establish the general principle that meetings of corporations for the performance of corporate acts must be held within the state creating the corporation. 14 Cor. Jur. 886, and 7 R. C. L. 335. Our own state has enacted this principle into the statute, i. e., that meetings of stockholders must be held within the state. The reason given for this rule is that in the performance of corporate acts, the corporation shall be at all times under the supervision and control of the laws of the state creating the corporation. If this be true of private corporations, a fortiori is it true of an arm of the state government, a body corporate to whom has been intrusted the performance of a governmental duty designated to protect the people of the state against unskilled and incompetent persons in a profession for which the state has seen fit to fix standards of proficiency before admission to practice.

As has been said, "jurisdiction" involves the hearing as well as the determining of matters to be decided—indeed the hearing of the matter is the basis for the determination. The giving of examinations for determining the qualifications of applicants is not a mere incidental or ministerial duty such as might be delegated by the State Board of Accountancy to other persons, but is a judicial or quasi judicial duty required to be performed by the members of the Board themselves, and in order further to safeguard the public, certain standards of skill are required of the examiners. The plaintiff contends that the submission and the supervision of the holding of the examination, and the determination of the qualifications of applicants, constitute one official act, requiring such judgment and discretion as to render it judicial or quasi judicial in character; that it is the performing of a function of government designed to benefit the people of the state; and therefore in going beyond the boundaries of the state to perform this function, the Board would exceed its jurisdiction. It seems superfluous to cite other authorities than those already cited from our own court in Ferebee v. Hinton, 102 N. C. 99, 8 S. E. 922, and in Long v. Crews, 113 N. C. 256, 18 S. E. 499, either as to the judicial character of the official acts of the Board of Accountancy, or as to the place where these acts may be performed. The comparatively simple act of taking the acknowledgments and examination of the grantors in a deed, by a notary, commissioner, justice of the peace, or clerk, has been repeatedly held by this court to be judicial, not only in the cases cited above, but in Attorney General v. Knight, 169 N. O. 333, 85 S. E. 418, L. R. A. 1915F, 898, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 517; Paul v. Carpenter, 70 N. C. 508; White v. Connolly, 105 N. O. 68, 11 S. E. 177; Piland v. Taylor, 113 N. O. 1, 18 S. E. 70; and others.

Bishop on Noncontract Laws, §§ 785, 786, says that quasi judicial functions are those which lie midway between the judicial and the ministerial ones. The lines, separating them from such as are on their two sides, are necessarily indistinct; but in general terms, when the law, in words or by implication, commits to any officer the duty of looking into facts, and acting upon them, not in a way which it specifically directs, but after a discretion in its nature judicial, the function is termed quasi judicial. In 18 R. O. L. 294, in discussing the extent to which a board of examiners may be controlled in granting professional licenses, the discretionary power to pass on qualifications is termed "judicial," and in every case where the acts complained of constituted an abuse of discretion or an excess of jurisdiction, it is held that the courts should intervene to enforce or enjoin, as the circumstances might be. In 22 R. C. L. 383, it is said that certain officers are considered quasi judicial, as, for example, members of a board of pilot commissioners, to whom the law has intrusted certain duties, the performance of which requires the exercise of judgment. In Boner v. Adams, Auditor, and Jenkins, Treasurer, 65 N. O. 639, it was held that the state auditor is not a mere ministerial officer, but exercises discretionary powers. It was held in Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, at 378, 18 L. Ed. 366, that the admission and exclusion of attorneys is the exercise of judicial power, and had been so held in numerous cases at that time. This has been approved in numerous later decisions referred to in Rose's Notes, vol. 6, p. 55. In Troop on Public Officers, p. 507 et seq. it is said that although an officer may not in strictness be a judge, still, if his powers are discretionary, to be exerted or withheld according to his own view of what is necessary and proper, they are in their nature judicial. Where a power rests in judgment or discretion, so that it is of a judicial nature or character, but does not involve the exercise of the functions of a judge, or is conferred upon an officer other than a judicial officer, the expression used is generally "quasi judicial." It is a general and sound principle that whenever the law vests any person with a power to do an act, and constitutes him a judge of the evidence on which the act may be done, and, at the same time, contemplates that the act is to be carried into effect through the instrumentality of agents, the person thus clothed with power is invested with discretion, and is quoad hoc a judge.

By "judicial action" is meant, in legal understanding, that which requires the exercise of judgment or discretion by one or more persons, or by a corporate body, when acting as public officers, in an official character, as shall seem to them to be equitable and just.

In State v. State Medical Examining Board, 32 Minn. 324, 20 N. W. 238, 50 Am. Rep. 575, in People v. Dental Examiners, 110 Ill. 180, in State v. Gregory, 83 Mo. 123, 53 Am. Rep. 565, in Williams v. Dental Examiners, 93 Tenn. 619, 27 S. W. 1019, and many similar cases, it was held that examining boards for physicians, dentists, lawyers, and other professions, exercise judicial or quasi judicial powers; and in all other cases the courts addressed themselves largely to determining whether the act complained of was within, or in excess, or abuse, of such powers; if the latter, it could be enjoined or enforced by the courts. In the much-cited case of State v. Chittendon, 127 Wis. 468, 107 N. W. 500, at 516, it is said that the law leaves the matter (decision as to status of the college) to the board, acting reasonably, the same as similar matters are commonly left to such agencies exercising quasi judicial authority. It contemplates that the members of the board will proceed with the dignity and fairness commonly expected of tribunals exercising judicial or quasi judicial authority; that they will act as a body; that they will act upon proof of some sort reasonably appropriate to the case and made a matter of record, not necessarily that they will, in all cases, act regardless of personal investigation, but that in case of reliance thereon the result of the investigation will be made a matter of record. In short, that they will exercise their judicial function judicially, and that their decisions will be open to review by the courts for jurisdictional error.

[9-11] The general rule for the construction of statutes, when applied to the law under consideration, clearly indicate that the intention of the Legislature, and the object to be secured by the performance of the duties presented for the Board of Accountancy, require that the words "at such places as it may designate" shall be construed to mean "at such places within the state as it may designate." In construing a statute, it is to be considered in its relation to other laws, as part of a general and uniform system of jurisprudence, in connection with other statutes on the same or cognate subjects, or even on different subjects. Where the language is of doubtful meaning, or adherence to the strict letter would lead to injustice, the court gives a reasonable construction consistent with the general principles of law. The spirit or reason of the law prevails over its letter. The meaning of general terms may be restrained by the evident object, or purpose to be attained, and general language may be construed to admit implied exceptions, in order to accomplish what was manifestly intended. It is proper to consider the occasion and the necessity for its enactment, and that construction should be given which is best calculated to advance the object by suppressing the mischief and securing the benefits contemplated. If the purpose, and well-ascertained object of a statute, are inconsistent with the exact words, the latter must yield to the controlling influence of the legislative will resulting from a consideration of the whole act. A statute should not be extended beyond the fair and reasonable meaning of its terms because the Legislature did not use proper words to express its meaning. Where the ordinary interpretation of a statute leads to consequences so dangerous and absurd that they could never have been intended, the court may adopt a construction from analogous provisions and thus supply an omission. Abernethy v. Com'rs, 169 N. C. 631, 86 S. E. 577.

[12] The above is a summary of some of the general principles for the construction of statutes as laid down in 36 Cyc. 1102 et seq., and many decisions, and when applied to the statute under consideration in the case at bar, the conclusion is inevitable that the field for the discharge of the functions of the State Board of Accountancy is not the whole world, but only "such places within the state as the Board may designate." In State v. Insurance Co., 66 Ark. 466, 51 S. W. 633, 45 L. R. A. 348, in construing a statute in which the word "any" occurred thirteen times in the first section, the court held that although the Legislature may use generally words, such as "any" or "all," in describing the persons or acts to which the statute applies, still it does not follow that the law has any extraterritorial effect; for it is presumed that the Legislature did not presume it to have such an extensive, or world-wide effect, unless the language of the statute admits of no other reasonable interpretation. Bond v. Jay, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 351, 3 L. Ed. 367. The reports furnish numerous instances of the application of this rule, by which general words used in statutes are taken as limited to cases within the jurisdiction, of the Legislature passing the statute, and confining its operation to matters affecting persons and property in such jurisdiction. If it were necessary, hundreds of cases and statutes could be referred to containing general words which are thus limited. Among the vast number of cases construing such statutes, it is doubtful if one can be found in which such general words have not been treated as limited to some extent, for it is unusual for a Legislature to intend that its statutes shall apply everywhere.

[13] We have already referred to the law of corporations as being a law on a cognate subject. Even more closely allied is our law as it relates to such professions as law, medicine, etc. Until 1917, our statute did not prescribe where the examinations for entrance to the bar were to be held, and even now the statute (C. S. 195) says that examinations for license to practice law may be held in the city of Raleigh. Before 1917 the examiners for admission to the bar did not construe their authority to permit holding examinations outside the state, nor since 1917 at any place other than the city of Raleigh, even though the word "may" sometimes implies discretion. Section 6609, Cons. St., prescribes that the board of medical examiners shall meet in the city of Raleigh. Section 6701, Cons. St., prescribes that the board of osteopathic examiners shall meet in Raleigh in July of each year, "and at such other times and places as a majority of the board may designate." In our statutes, some discretion is permitted the various other boards of examiners for dentists, pharmacists, nurses, teachers, etc. In these cases, however, we are not left to apply only the general rules for the construction of statutes. The law is unmistakably clear that the Legislature has no power to enact statutes, even though in general words, that can extend in their operation and effect beyond the territory of the sovereignty from which the statute emanates. The legislative authority of every state must spend its force within the territorial limits of the state. Cooley's Cons. Lim. p. 154. As a general rule, no law has any effect of its own force beyond the territorial limits of the sovereignty from which its authority is derived. 25 R. O. L. 781; Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 16 Sup. Ct. 139, 40 L. Ed. 95. Black, on Interpretation of Laws, p. 91, says:

"Prima facie, every statute is confined in its operation to the persons, property, rights, or contracts, which are within the territorial jurisdiction of the legislature which enacted it. The presumption is always against any intention to attempt giving to the act an extraterritorial operation and effect."

Endlich, on Interpretation of Statutes, p. 233, announces the same principle.

No presumption arises, from a failure of the state through its legislative authority to speak on the subject, that the state intends to grant any right, privilege, or authority under its laws to be exercised beyond its jurisdiction. Walbridge v. Robinson, 22 Idaho, 236, 125 Pac. 812, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.), 240. Either the statute applies to "such places within the state as the Board may designate," or its scope is unlimited, and, for the convenience of applicants, the Board may hold examinations anywhere and everywhere it sees fit. And if this Board may go outside the state to hold examinations, why may not every other examining board of the state do likewise if the place is left to its discretion? Obviously, this would be subversive of public policy, of the spirit and intent of the law, would defeat the very ends which these protective statutes were enacted to accomplish, and might, in effect, make the creature greater than the creator.

[14] We must not be understood as holding that the Legislature may not require certain official acts to be done beyond the state's limits, for it can legally do so, as for example in requiring depositions of witnesses or the acknowledgment of a deed or other instrument, to be taken in some other state, or even in a foreign country, and perhaps there are other illustrations of this legislative power. But they are done by its express permission, and are not merely implied.

The demurrer of the defendants admits as true the allegations of the complaint that the defendants intended:

1. To hold the examination outside the state.

2. To use in that examination the same questions that had been used in the preceding week in an examination in Raleigh; and

3. That these duplicate questions were available to candidates for certificates in the Washington examination.

[15, 16] The defendants say that it was at the solicitation of applicants and for their convenience (not for the public welfare or interest) that they proposed to give the duplicate examination in Washington the week following the Raleigh examination. As a matter of fact, the defendants do not deny that some applicants were going to Washington from North Carolina to take the duplicate examination. This court may judge for itself of the relative "convenience" of Washington and Raleigh for applicants already in this state, and of the interest of the citizens of this state to be served by holding a duplicate examination outside the state the week after such examination was held in Raleigh. The plaintiff seems to be in entire accord with the statement of the defendants in their demurrer that the act creating the State Board of Accountancy and prescribing its duties and powers was passed in the interest of the general public, to protect them against incompetent, inefficient, or dishonest persons, and not for the purpose of granting special privileges or emoluments to any class of persons. The plaintiff contends, however, that in attempting to hold an examination in the city of Washington, "at the earnest solicitation of numbers of applicants living in that section," and, as stated by defendants on the hearing, "for the convenience of applicants," the Board was attempting to "grant special privileges" to those applicants, and even greater "special privilege" was the intended use of duplicate questions which were available to applicants. This court, with these admitted facts before it, can judge whether an official act thus performed is "for the public interest" or for the promotion of the personal interest of applicants. It is an unprecedented thing for the other examining boards of the state to go beyond the borders of the state to give examinations (much less duplicate examinations) to applicants who may not find it convenient to come to the state to take the same. Yet the defendants claim that they are justified in going hundreds of miles beyond the state boundaries, the week following an examination in Raleigh, to give a duplicate of that examination, because it is more convenient to certain applicants to take the examination in Washington—and some of the applicants going from this state to Washington for that purpose. As well suggested by the plaintiff's learned counsel, it is peculiar to certified accountants in Washington that the mountain should come to Mahomet. It is an established rule that when the means for the exercise of a granted power are given, no other or different means can be implied, as being more effective or convenient. Cooley's Cons. Lim. (4th Ed.) p. 78. In stating in the call that this was "positively the last examination to be held outside the state," the Board of Accountancy impliedly admits that it considered such procedure irregular, to say the least.

[17, 18] The authorities cited above, defining judicial and quasi judicial officers, also establish the principle that when such officers exceed their jurisdiction or abuse their discretion it is subject to review by the courts; in fact, so fundamental is this principle that in most of the cases the courts do not discuss it, but address themselves to determining whether or not the act complained of was in excess of jurisdiction or in abuse of discretion, and if they decide these questions in the affirmative, then it is held as a matter of course that the act should be enforced or enjoined, as the case may be. In Throop on Public Officers, p. 525 et seq., it is said that where, in the exercise of a power, an officer is vested with a discretion, his act is regarded as quasi judicial. But, of course, if the officer or board attempts to exercise a power, either judicial or ministerial, in a case to which his or its jurisdiction does not extend, the act is either absolutely void or voidable by judicial proceedings, as the case may be. But the exercise of discretionary power is always subject, in some respects, to review by the courts. So it may be reviewed, where it has violated some rule of public policy, and of course it will be violated by any illegality or excess of jurisdiction. This principle has been enacted into our state laws for municipalities (C. S. 2962), giving to any taxable inhabitant the right to maintain an action to set aside or prevent any illegal official act on the part of the municipality or its officers, and it is also well settled by numerous decisions of this court, and has received the sanction of the Supreme Court of the United States in Crampton v. Zabriskie, 101 U. S. 601, 609, 25 L. Ed. 1070, quoted in Dillon, Mun. Cor. § 1581, and cited with approval in Stratford v. Greensboro, 124 N. C. 127, 32 S. E. 394. In referring to statutes similar to our own as found in C. S. 2962, Dillon, Mun. Cor., § 1585, says:

"The first class of wrongs provided for by the statute is simply defined as 'an illegal act,' and the statute contains no express provision that the illegal official act against which redress is sought be one which has resulted or will result in loss or injury to the municipality. So far as the literal language of the statute is concerned, any illegal official act may be prevented at the suit of a taxpayer having the requisite status as such. This liberal interpretation of the statute has been supported by the courts."

In the notes to the above, it is said, citing authorities, that an illegal official act which may be the subject of the taxpayer's action may be any act of a municipal officer which is not authorized by law or which is in excess of the authority conferred by law. In actions brought by taxpayers the court has taken jurisdiction and has restrained or annulled official acts of great diversity of character.

[19] The state in the lawful exercise of its police power has created the State Board of Accountancy and required examinations of applicants to safeguard the public against incompetent accountants. Every citizen of the state is, in a certain sense, injured when the duties of the Board are performed in such a manner as to let down the bars and lower the standards of the profession. There is an especial injury to properly accredited members of the profession who have met the conditions imposed by law, in the manner prescribed by law. Poor Richard says, "He who hath a trade hath an estate." A man's profession is his capital. The state has set standards for entrance into this profession, and those who have entered in the manner prescribed by law are entitled to the protection of the state to the extent, at least, that they shall not be unjustly discriminated against by admission of other into the profession in any other way than that prescribed by law.

[20] It is not necessary to go beyond the decisions of our own court to establish the contention that this is a subject for the cognizance and intervention of our courts. In Glenn v. Commrs., 139 N. C. 421, 52 S. E. 58, our court said: "If an ultra vires act were being threatened, the courts would enjoin it." In all the following cases it is said that when a discretionary power is exercised wrongfully, or transcends the authority of the officers, or is ultra vires, or when there is a manifest abuse of discretion, the courts will enforce, or enjoin the act, as the case may be, at the suit of a citizen, or taxpayer, and whenever the court has declined to intervene, it has been on the ground that the act complained of was infra vires. Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244; Vaughn v. Commissioners, 118 N. C. 636, 24 S. E. 425; Stratford v. Greensboro, 124 N. C. 127, 32 S. E. 394; Edgerton v. Water Co., 126 N. C. 93, 35 S. E. 243, 48 L. R. A. 444; Ewbank v. Turner, 134 N. C. 77, 46 S. E. 508; Barnes v. Commissioners, 135 N. C. 27, 47 S. E. 737; Graves v. Commissioners, 135 N. C. 49, 47 S. E. 134; Merrimon v. Paving Co., 142 N. C. 539, 55 S. E. 366, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 574; Newton v. Com'rs, 158 N. C. 196, 73 S. E. 886; Commissioners v. Commissioners, 165 N. C. 632, 81 S. E. 1001; Supervisors v. Com'rs, 169 N. C. 548, 86 S. E. 520; Cobb v. R. R., 172 N. C. 58, 89 S. E. 807.

The decisions of the courts of other states and the principle announced by the various text-books are well summarized in Perkins v. Indl. School Dist., 56 Iowa, 476, 9 N. W. 356, where it was held that the courts of the state are arbiters of all questions involving the construction of the statutes conferring authority upon officers and jurisdiction upon special tribunals. It was certainly never the intention of the Legislature to confer upon school boards, superintendents of schools, or other officers discharging quasi judicial functions, exclusive authority to decide questions pertaining to their jurisdiction and the extent of their power. All such questions may be determined by the courts of the state. Hence, when the rights of a citizen are involved, in the exercise of authority by a school officer, the courts may determine whether such authority was lawfully exercised.

[21] As to the demurrer, we have covered the entire field of inquiry, as the facts stated in the complaint are to be taken as admitted. On the motion for a continuance of the injunction to the hearing, there is an affidavit of Mr. G. G. Scott denying that the same questions as propounded in the state were used in the Washington examination, thereby giving the applicants there a decided advantage over those examined here. But we need not settle the controversy of fact, because it has been the rule for time out of mind that where there is conflict in the evidence the injunction is generally continued to the hearing. We stated the prevailing rule in Cobb v. Clegg, 137 N. C. 153, at page 159, 49 S. E. 80, where it was said that it is generally proper, when the parties are at issue concerning the legal or equitable right, to grant an interlocutory injunction to preserve the right in statu quo until the determination of the controversy, and especially is this the rule when the principal relief sought is in itself an injunction, because a dissolution of a pending interlocutory injunction, or the refusal of one, upon application therefor in the first instance, will virtually decide the case upon its merits and deprive the plaintiff of all remedy or relief, even though he should be afterwards able to show ever so good a case. The principles we have attempted to state are, we think, well supported by the authorities upon this subject, citing 1 High on Injunctions (3d Ed.) § 6; Bishpam's Eq. (6th Ed.) § 405; Marshall v. Com'rs, 89 N. C. 103; Capehart v. Mhoon, 45 N. C. 30; Jarman v. Saunders, 64 N. C. 367; Lowe v. Com'rs, 70 N. C. 532, and other authorities. In the Marshall Case, supra, the court said:

"The injunctive relief sought in this action is not merely auxiliary to the principal relief demanded, but it is the relief, and a perpetual injunction is demanded. To dissolve the injunction, therefore, would be practically to deny the relief sought and terminate the action. This the court will never do, where it may be that possibly the plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded. In such cases, it will not determine the matter upon a preliminary hearing upon the pleadings and ex parte affidavits, but it will preserve the matter intact until the action can be regularly heard upon its merits. Any other course would defeat the end to be attained by the action."

[22] The case last cited is directly in point here. But without the aid of this principle and the authorities sustaining it, we hold that the injunction should have been continued to the final hearing. It is argued that this case is like that where the tree was cut down, after the restraining order against felling it had been vacated. Harrison v. Bryan, 148 N. C. 315, 62 S. E. 305, and these additional cases are cited, supposedly to the same effect. Pickler v. Board of Education, 149 N. C. 221, 62 S. E. 902; Wallace v. North Wilkesboro, 151 N. C. 614, 66 S. E. 657; Moore v. Monument Co., 166 N. C. 211, 81 S. E. 170. But they do not apply to this case, as the facts are not the same. In Harrison v. Bryan, supra, the tree had fallen under the stroke of the axe, never to rise again. It could not grow again after it had been destroyed. It had died and was therefore beyond restoration. This was a fact established, and not even a mandatory injunction could change it. But here, the act of the defendants may be repeated—it, at least, is possible for them to do so, and plaintiffs are not bound by their declared intention not to repeat their mistake. The law will strip them of the power to do so by its restraining process.

The entire judgment below will be reversed, injunction to the final hearing issued, the demurrer overruled, and the defendants permitted to answer over, if they so desire.

Reversed.

SCHOOL DIST. NO. 19 v. MARION COUNTY. (No. 10762.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Dec. 6, 1921.)

Appeal and error \Rightarrow 1099(3)—Judgment reversing order sustaining demurrer to complaint held res judicata as to right to recover on merits.

Judgment of Supreme Court, reversing order sustaining demurrer to complaint in action against county on ground that county could not be sued, held res judicata on subsequent appeal as to the right to recover against the county in the action on the merits.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Marion County; R. W. Memminger, Judge.

Action by School District No. 19 against the County of Marion. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

The exceptions referred to are as follows:

(1) In that his honor erred, it is respectfully submitted, in not granting the first ground of defendant's motion for a directed verdict, to wit: "Because it now appears affirmatively from the testimony and evidence that, in the cutting of the trees in question, the road hands went without the public highway and committed a trespass, and the enabling act, whereby counties may be sued, does not extend the liability of the corporation to trespasses committed by persons who may be in its employment"—it being submitted that the injury proved in this case arose through neither a defect in the highway nor in the negligent repair thereof, but, on the contrary, arose from a trespass on property entirely without the highway.

(2) In that his honor erred, it is respectfully submitted, in not granting the second ground of defendant's motion for a directed verdict, to wit: "Because it now appears affirmatively from the testimony and evidence that, in the cutting of the trees in question, the road hands went without the public highway and committed a trespass without authority from the county commissioners, and, under the terms of the enabling act, providing for suits against counties, the county is no more liable for the cutting of these trees than it would be, had the hands burned the schoolhouse or committed some other like act of trespass"—it being submitted that, in going upon the lands of another and committing a trespass thereon, the road hands exceeded the scope of their employment or agency, and the corporation cannot be held liable therefor.

M. C. Woods, of Marion, for appellant.
J. W. Johnson, of Marion, for respondent.

GARY, C. J. The following statement appears in the record:

"This action was commenced by respondent against appellant on September 1, 1919, for damages alleged to have been sustained by respondent from the cutting down of trees by road hands on respondent's lot. To the complaint, the appellant interposed a demurrer, which was sustained by the circuit judge, and the order of the circuit judge was reversed on appeal. 114 S. C. 382, 103 S. E. 767. The case was tried on its merits at the spring term of the court of common pleas for Marion county, and the jury gave respondent a verdict for $250. Within due time appellant gave notice of intention to appeal."

There are two reasons why the exceptions cannot be sustained. In the first place, the questions raised are res adjudicata; and, in the second place, the principles for which the appellant contends are concluded by the cases of Faust v. Richland County and Kelly v. Richland County, 109 S. E. 151, in which the opinions were recently filed; the decisions having been rendered by the court en banc.

Appeal dismissed.

WATTS, FRASER, and COTHRAN, JJ., concur.

COTHRAN, J. I concur in the ground that the former appeal is res adjudicata. The judgment in that appeal is in my opinion wrong, and should have been overruled, for the reasons given by me in the case of Faust v. Railroad Co. Both cases will yet be overruled.

(118 S. C. 10)

MILLER v. COOPER, Governor, et al.
(No. 10759.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Dec. 6, 1921.)

Mandamus ¶10—Will not lie to compel state official to present, audit, and approve claim for services where it is not clear that state agreed to pay.

Mandamus will not lie to require officials to present, audit, and approve dentist's claim for services performed on inmates of penitentiary where there is a controversy as to whether the state had agreed to pay for such services.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; W. H. Townsend, Judge.

Mandamus by G. F. Miller against R. A. Cooper, Governor of the State of South Carolina, as ex officio member of the Board of Directors of the State Penitentiary, and others. Writ denied, and relator appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Relator claimed to have performed dental services for inmates of state penitentiary, and brings this proceeding against the defendant officials to require them to present, audit, and approve his claim therefor. The defendants denied that the state had contracted to pay relator for such services, and claimed that the services were to have been paid for by the inmates for whom services were rendered.

Order of lower court denying writ is as follows:

This matter came on for hearing before me upon petition and return thereto and traverse herein filed. Upon consideration of the entire matter, and after hearing argument of counsel, I hold that the matter of contract between the parties herein is in controversy, and is not conclusive; it is not clear that the petitioner was employed by the superintendent of the penitentiary, and therefore the case does not present facts justifying a writ of mandamus. Therefore it is ordered that the petition be, and hereby is, dismissed, and the prayer refused.

T. H. Peebles and G. D. Bellinger, both of Columbia, for appellant.

Samuel M. Wolfe, Atty. Gen., for respondents.

GARY, C. J. For the reasons assigned by his honor the circuit judge, the appeal herein is dismissed.

WATTS, FRASER, and COTHRAN, JJ., concur.

DE HAY et al. v. SMITH et al. (No. 10757.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Dec. 6, 1921.)

1. Partition ¶46(1)—Rule requiring personal representative to be made a party is not jurisdictional.

Circuit court rule 55, prohibiting partition of real estate of a deceased person unless the personal representatives are parties, and the personal estate is sufficient for the payment of debts, or provision for such payment is made in the decree for partition, is only a rule of practice, and is not jurisdictional in its nature.

2. Partition ¶46(1)—Administrator of deceased owner held not a necessary party.

In a suit for partition of the estate of a deceased person, a complaint alleging that the estate owed no debts, and that the sole distributees were parties to the action, shows that the administrator was not a necessary party to the action, especially where the plaintiffs, in their exception to the sustaining of a demurrer for failure to make him a party, indicated willingness that provision in the decree should be made for the payment of any debts of the estate.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Dorchester County; I. W. Bowman, Judge.

Action for partition by Shulle De Hay and others against C. V. Smith and others. From an order sustaining the demurrer of the named defendant to the complaint because of a defect of parties, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

M. S. Connor, of St. George, and Wolfe & Berry, of Orangeburg, for appellants.

Legare Walker, of Summerville, for respondent.

GARY, C. J. The facts are thus stated in the record:

"This is an action for partition of 43 acres of land situate in Dorchester county, in said state.

"The complaint states, inter alia, 'that T. G. Smith, late a resident of the county of Dorchester and state aforesaid, departed this life intestate on or about the — day of May, 1917, leaving as his sole heirs at law and distributees of his estate the plaintiffs and the defendants above named, together with his widow, Sarah Smith, who died on or about the — day of September, 1919; (2) that there was no administration upon either the estate of T. G. Smith, deceased, or Sarah Smith, deceased, and their respective estates owed no debts.'

"To this complaint, and in due season, the respondent, C. V. Smith, by counsel interposed a demurrer that the complaint showed upon its face a defect of parties in that the administrator of the estate of T. G. Smith had not been made a party.

"After hearing arguments thereon, Hon. I. W. Bowman, presiding judge, sustained this demurrer, and made an order requiring the complaint to be amended within 30 days by making the administrator a party, else that the complaint stand dismissed.

"Within 10 days the appellants served due written notice of intention to appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court."

The following are the appellant's exceptions:

"1. Because his honor erred in sustaining the said demurrer.

"2. Because his honor erred in requiring the administrator to be made a party.

"3. Because his honor erred in not holding that the said demurrer should be overruled because: (1) More than 12 months had elapsed since the death of T. G. Smith; (2) no creditor had administered; (3) no administrator had ever been appointed; and (4) due provision could be made for the payment of debts, if any, in the decree of the court, by advertising for such creditors, and requiring them to present and prove their claims, agreeably to the practice of this court, before the master."

[1] So much of rule 55 of the circuit court as relates to the question involved is as follows:

"No partition of real estate of a deceased person shall be had unless the legal representatives of such deceased person be made parties to the action and it be made to appear to the court that the debts of such deceased person are fully paid, or that the personal estate in the hands of the personal representative or representatives is sufficient for the payment of the debts of such deceased person, or unless in the decree due provision is made for the payment of debts."

It is only a rule of practice, and not jurisdictional in its nature. Gladden v. Chapman, 106 S. C. 486, 91 S. E. 796.

[2] The complaint alleges that neither the estate of T. G. Smith nor that of Sarah Smith owed any debts, and that the sole distributees of said estates are parties to this action. Therefore the administrator of T. G. Smith's estate was not a necessary party to the action. Fogle v. St. Michael Church, 48 S. C. 86, 26 S. E. 99; Grant v. Poyas, 62 S. C. 426, 40 S. E. 891; Thompson v. Ins. Co., 95 S. C. 16, 78 S. E. 439; Lanter v. Ins. Co., 114 S. C. 536, 104 S. E. 193.

GULF REFINING CO. v. McCANDLESS et al. (No. 10758.)

1. Bailment \S 21—Renting or hiring of property for "temporary use" within statute as to recordation of agreement defined.

The renting or hiring of property for "temporary use" within Civ. Code 1912, \S 3740, requiring agreements between bailor and bailee to be in writing, and to be recorded in same manner as chattel mortgages, and providing that the requirement shall not apply to "persons renting or hiring property for temporary use," is a renting or hiring of property for such length of time as is not reasonably calculated to mislead subsequent creditors and purchasers into the belief that the person in possession is the owner; the word "temporary" not being used in contradistinction to the word "permanent."

2. Judicial sales \S 50(1) — Rule of caveat emptor prevails in sale of property under compulsory process.

Where property is sold under compulsory process to raise money to pay debts, the rule of caveat emptor prevails, and the officer sells and the purchaser buys only the interest which the debtor has in the property.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; W. H. Townsend, Judge.

Action by the Gulf Refining Company against W. J. McCandless and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. N. Graydon and A. J. Bethea, both of Columbia, for appellant.

E. J. Best and C. N. Sapp, both of Columbia, for respondents.

GARY, C. J. This is an action to recover the possession of a gasoline tank and piping; and the appeal involves the construction of section 3740, Code of Laws 1912, which is as follows:

"Every agreement between the vendor and vendee, bailor or bailee, of personal property, whereby the vendor or bailor shall reserve to himself any interest in the same, shall be null and void as to subsequent creditors (whether lien creditors or simple contract creditors) or purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, unless the same be reduced to writing and recorded in the manner now provided by law for the recording of mortgages; but nothing herein contained shall apply to livery stable keepers, inn keepers, or any other persons, letting or hiring property for temporary use or for agricultural purposes, or depositing such property for the purpose of repairs or work or labor done thereon, or as a pledge or collateral to any loan."

The allegations of the complaint material to the questions raised by the exceptions are as follows:

"That on or about the 15th day of March, 1917, plaintiff entered into an agreement with Motor Accessory Company of the city of Columbia whereby plaintiff, at the request of said Motor Accessory Company, and because said Motor Accessory Company was purchasing gasoline from plaintiff, and agreed to continue so to do, and in further consideration of an annual rental of $1, installed on the street in front of the premises occupied by said Motor Accessory Company at 1205 Lady street one gasoline storage tank with the necessary piping by permission of said city of Columbia, and also by permission of the owner of the premises occupied by said Motor Accessory Company; that in and by said agreement it was understood that the Motor Accessory Company would not incur or remove said equipment, or do or suffer to be done anything where said equipment, or any part thereof, should be seized, taken in execution, attached, destroyed, or damaged, or by which the title of the plaintiff to same might in any way be disturbed or prejudiced. It was further stipulated in said agreement that upon the sale or any disposition of the premises by said Motor Accessory Company, or at the end of one year, said agreement should terminate, and plaintiff should have the right to enter upon the said premises and remove said equipment and every part thereof."

The defendants denied the allegations of the complaint and alleged by way of defense that on or about the 28th day of November, 1919, they purchased at a public sale which was made pursuant to an order of the court in a bankruptcy proceeding all the goods and chattels of the Motor Accessory Company, including the said gasoline tank and piping, without notice of the plaintiff's title to the property.

The defendants were not creditors of the Motor Accessory Company.

His honor the presiding judge thus charged the jury:

"If you intrust your property into the hands of some one else, you should record that in writing in the clerk of court's office if that should be such property as the statute which I have just read includes. But, unless it should be in accordance with what the statute provides, then you are not required to record such a paper. For instance, if you go to a pawnshop, it would be different, and if you would go to a livery stable, and leave your horse there, it would be different. You would not have to have an agreement written out and recorded. If the property is intrusted to another party for a short, temporary period of time, that is one matter; but, if you intrust your property to some one else for a long period of time, which is intended to last indefinitely, from year to year, then the law requires that an agreement such as that be reduced to writing, and to be recorded. So I charge you that, if the gasoline tank was in the possession of the Motor Accessory Company, you will decide this case under the law as I have charged you, applied to the facts as you find them from the evidence."

The exceptions assign error on the part of his honor the circuit judge in defining the words "temporary use" in the foregoing section of the statute.

[1] In order properly to construe the words "nothing herein contained shall apply to any persons renting or hiring property for temporary use," it is necessary for us to ascertain the intention of the statute. Its primary purpose, unquestionably, was the protection of subsequent creditors and purchasers for valuable consideration without notice. Therefore the word "temporary" was not used in contradistinction to the word "permanent," or any definite period of time, but to indicate such length of time as is not reasonably calculated to mislead subsequent creditors and purchasers into the belief that the person in possession of the property is the owner thereof.

The charge of his honor the presiding judge failed to conform to this construction, and the error was prejudicial to the rights of the plaintiff.

There is another reason why the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession of the property.

[2] When property is sold under compulsory process to raise money to pay debts, the rule of caveat emptor prevails. The officer sells and the purchaser buys only the interest which the debtor has in the property.

In Perry v. Williams, Dud. 44, it is said:

"The rule in sheriff's sales is caveat emptor. The sheriff sells the interest of the defendant in the property, and the purchaser buys it, be it more or less. In the case of Moore v. Aiken, 2 Hill, 406, although it appeared that the defendant had no title, yet Aiken, who was the purchaser, was held to pay his bid. * * * In Davis v. Hunt, 2 Bailey, 412, the purchaser was held bound to pay, although he bought his own land, and did so under the supposition that his fi. fa. was the oldest."

STATE v. KNIGHT. (No. 10760.)

1. Criminal law \S 516—Testimony as to defendant's statement, on demand for possession of automobile, that automobile was in another state, held not evidence of confession.

In prosecution for disposing of mortgaged automobile without mortgagee's consent, in violation of Cr. Code 1912, \S 447, admission of testimony as to statement, made by defendant on demand for the automobile, that the automobile was in another state, held not error, as against contention that it constituted the admission of confession before establishment of corpus delicti; such testimony not proving a confession.

2. Criminal law \S 1169(12) — Admission of testimony held harmless, in view of subsequent testimony as to certain facts.

The admission of testimony as to certain facts claimed to constitute a confession, to which the defendant afterwards testified without objection, if error, was harmless.

3. Chattel mortgages \S 230 — Removal of mortgaged automobile to other state held violative of statute against disposal of mortgaged property without mortgagee's consent.

Mortgagor's removal of a mortgaged automobile to another state without mortgagee's consent held violative of Cr. Code 1912, \S 447, prohibiting a person from selling or disposing of mortgaged personal property without mortgagee's consent.

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Greenwood County; F. B. Gary, Judge.

E. D. Knight was convicted of disposing of a mortgaged automobile without consent of mortgagee, and he appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Jones & Harrison and Tillman & Mays, all of Greenwood, for appellant.

H. S. Blackwell, Sol., of Laurens, for the State.

GARY, C. J. The defendant was charged with disposing of an automobile over which the Overland-Greenville Company held a mortgage, in violation of section 447 of the Criminal Code, which provides:

"Any person or persons who shall sell or dispose of any personal property on which any mortgage or lien exists, without the written consent of the mortgagee or lienor, or the owner or holder of such mortgage or lien, and shall fail to pay the debt secured by the same within ten days after such sale or disposal, * * * shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. * * *"

The jury found him guilty; and the appeal herein is from the sentence imposed upon him. The exceptions are as follows:

"(1) Because his honor erred in admitting the testimony, over the objection of defendant's counsel, of A. McD. Singleton tending to show a confession of the defendant, E. D. Knight, that the automobile in question was in Augusta, Ga., before the state had established the corpus delicti.

"(2) Because his honor erred in admitting over objection the testimony of A. McD. Singleton tending to show a confession of E. D. Knight that the car had been removed from the county of Greenwood before the state had proved that the car had been sold or disposed of as contemplated in section 447, vol. 2, of the Code of Laws of South Carolina for 1912.

"(3) Because his honor erred in allowing A. McD. Singleton to testify as to the conversation which took place between himself and E. D. Knight, in that his honor stated that there was some testimony tending to prove the corpus delicti; whereas, there was no testimony tending to show that E. D. Knight had sold or disposed of the mortgaged property as contemplated by the statute.

"(4) Because his honor erred in refusing the defendant's motion for a directed verdict, in that the state had failed to prove that the removal of the property from Greenwood county was for the purpose of depriving the lienor of his rights under the mortgage.

"(5) Because his honor erred in refusing the defendant's motion for the direction of a verdict in that the state had failed to show that the automobile had been removed for the purpose of defrauding the holder of the mortgage.

"(6) Because his honor erred in refusing to allow the defendant's motion for the direction of a verdict at the close of the taking of all the testimony, in that there was not testimony sufficient to send the case to the jury."

[1, 2] The exceptions numbered 1 and 2 cannot be sustained, for the reason that the testimony therein mentioned cannot properly be classed as confessions. Furthermore, the defendant afterwards testified to such facts without objection.

[3] The third exception must be overruled, for the reason that there was testimony tending to show that the removal of the property to another state had the necessary effect of defeating the mortgage lien, which was sufficient to constitute a violation of section 447. In State v. Haynes, 74 S. C. 450, 55 S. E. 118, this court said:

"We think that removal of property from the jurisdiction of the state with the purpose or necessary effect of defeating the mortgage lien is such a disposal of property as falls within the meaning of the statute. If intention to defeat the lien is essential, one must be presumed to intend the necessary consequences of his voluntary acts." (Italics added.)

This language is quoted with approval in Hill v. Winnsboro Granite Corp., 112 S. C. 243, 90 S. E. 836.

What we have already said disposes of the remaining exceptions.

Appeal dismissed.

ADAMS v. WILKES et al. (No. 10735.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 10, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error \S 1002—Findings on conflicting evidence not disturbed.

Finding of jury on sharply conflicting evidence cannot be disturbed on appeal.

2. Evidence \S 505—Conclusion of expert held properly excluded.

In an action against installers of heating plant for damages for loss of house by fire, court did not err in refusing to allow witness offered as an expert to state that pipe was not properly installed, and to state where in his opinion the fire started, having been allowed to state that the chimney was built wrong, that pipe entered the corner thereof, and to be safe it should have entered at front of the chimney, etc., since the opinion of witness as to where the fire started must necessarily have been a conjecture which the jury were as capable of forming as the witness.

3. Appeal and error \S 1058(2)—Erroneous exclusion of evidence cured by admission of testimony of same witness.

Any error of the court in refusing to allow a witness to answer the question, "If that pipe had been properly installed, how ought it to have gone in there," was cured where such witness as an expert testified what would have been a proper way to install the pipe.

4. Appeal and error \S 736—Exception contrary to rule not considered.

An exception containing three distinct propositions with no specification of error to any one of them in violation of Supreme Court Rules, No. 5, \S 6 (90 S. E. vii) will not be considered.

5. Evidence \S 353(8)—Pleaded portion of contract below signature held admissible.

Court did not err in allowing in evidence the pleaded portion of a contract containing a guaranty which appeared below the signature of the complaining party, being upon the same sheet, and becoming a part of the contract regardless of the particular point upon the paper where the signature appeared.

6. Evidence \S 150—Test of furnace held admissible in action for loss by fire.

In an action against installers of heating plant for loss of house by fire claimed to have been caused by proximity of wood to pipe, where defendant contended that furnace did not start fire, court properly permitted witness to testify that they tied paper on the pipe of a larger furnace, and that the pipe did not set it afire, though the paper was left there $8\frac{1}{2}$ hours with the register red hot.

7. Trial \S 28(2)—Allowing attorneys to accompany jury in viewing premises discretionary.

It is discretionary with the presiding judge to allow or refuse to allow attorneys in the case to accompany the jury on an inspection of premises involved.

8. Negligence \S 138(1)—Instruction held not to absolve installers of furnace from exercising due care.

In an action against installers of heating plant for damages for loss of house by fire, an instruction held to protect plaintiff from any possible inference that in contracting to furnish a suitable chimney defendants were absolved from the duty of due care under the circumstances.

9. Trial \S 327—Verdict in singular instead of plural not reversible.

In an action against several defendants, plaintiff cannot complain that the verdict was in the singular, "for the defendant" instead of in the plural.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Laurens County; Ernest Moore, Judge.

Action by J. J. Adams against S. M. Wilkes and others, partners in trade, and doing business under the firm name of S. M. & E. H. Wilkes & Co. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Richey & Richey and H. S. Blackwell, all of Laurens, for appellant.

Simpson, Cooper & Babb and Featherstone & Knight, all of Laurens, for respondents.

COTHRAN, J. Action for $7,000 damages, alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff, in the destruction of his dwelling house by fire caused by the alleged negligence of the defendants in installing a heating plant, which they had undertaken under a written contract. The case was tried before Judge Moore and a jury, November term, 1920, and resulted in a verdict for the defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

On April 2, 1919, the plaintiff and the de defendants entered into a written contract, by which the defendants undertook to furnish and install in the plaintiff's dwelling house a heating plant of specified description, with certain accessories mentioned, for $253.50. The contract contained a certain guaranty, the only portion of which pertinent to the present controversy is an undertaking on the part of the plaintiff to furnish "a suitable chimney," into the lower part of which the smoke pipe from the furnace was to be inserted.

[1] The contention of the plaintiff was that the connection between the smoke pipe and the flue of the chimney was negligently made, in that the end of the pipe where it entered the chimney was so near the wood-work of the house, the sill, and hearth box that the latter caught fire from the heat of the pipe and destroyed the house. The defendants contend that the installation was properly completed and that the fire originated from some other cause. Each contention was supported by more than a dozen witnesses. The issue was sharply drawn, one of fact, submitted to the jury in an exceedingly clear and fair charge; they decided it in favor of the defendants, and their verdict cannot be disturbed unless the appellant has been able to point out prejudicial error in the admission of testimony or in the charge of the presiding Judge. This he has failed to do, as we will endeavor to demonstrate.

[2] The first exception imputes error in refusing to allow the witness Fitzsimmons to state that the pipe was not properly installed, and to state where, in his opinion, the fire started, the witness having as claimed, qualified as an expert in the investigation and location of the origin of fires.

The witness was allowed to state that the flue (of the chimney) was built wrong; that the pipe entered the corner of the chimney; that to be safe it should have entered in front of the fireplace, and not at the corner of the chimney, with an elbow; that, entering the corner, there should have been a course of two bricks laid flat between the entrance of the pipe and any inflammable material. It was a necessary conclusion from this testimony that the pipe was not properly installed, which the jury were as capable of forming as the witness, and must have formed if they believed the witness. The refusal to allow the witness to state the only possible conclusion from this testimony was entirely proper.

The question of the origin of the fire was one of the issues of fact in the case, to be determined by the jury from the evidence. The opinion of the witness must necessarily have been a conjecture, which the jury were as capable of forming as the witness; the matter was properly left to them.

[3] The second exception imputes error in refusing to allow the witness May to answer the question:

"If that pipe had been properly installed, how ought it to have gone in there?"

The agreed case contained the statement:

"The witness then as an expert testified what would have been a proper way to have put the pipe in the chimney."

This covered any possible error that may have been committed.

[4] The third exception contains three distinct propositions, with no specification of error to any one of them, in violation of rule 5, § 6, Supreme Court Rules (90 S. E. vii), and will not be considered.

[5] The fourth exception imputes error in allowing in evidence the printed portion of the contract containing the guaranty, which appeared below the signature of the plaintiff. The guaranty was upon the same sheet, and became a part of the contract regardless of the particular point upon the paper where the signature appeared.

[6] The fifth exception imputes error in the admission of the testimony of two witnesses, who testified to a paper test they had made, to ascertain whether the heat of the pipe would be sufficient to ignite inflammable material at a point about 11 feet from the furnace. The contention of the plaintiff was that the pipe set fire to a wooden sill about 4 inches from the end of the pipe at the point where it entered the chimney. The testimony of the witnesses was to the effect that they made the paper test upon a furnace larger than the plaintiff's, the paper being tied on the pipe and left there 3½ hours with the register red hot, and that it did not ignite. The testimony was clearly admissible.

[7] The sixth exception imputes error in refusing to allow the attorneys in the case to accompany the jury in an inspection of the premises; a matter within the discretion of the presiding judge.

[8] The seventh exception is obnoxious to rule 5, § 6. We may say, however, that the circuit judge was exceedingly particular to protect the plaintiff from any possible inference that, in contracting to furnish a suitable chimney, the defendants were absolved from the duty of exercising due care under the circumstances. He charged the jury:

"So, if you conclude that the heating plant caused the fire, you next ascertain from the evidence whether or not there was negligence and carelessness on the part of the defendants in putting it in. Did they put it in so as to bring the heat in contact with, or so near, the timber as to communicate fire to the timber and then set fire to the house? Was there a piece of timber there, and by the exercise of due care could they have found out that it was there? These are questions of fact which you are to decide from the evidence, and the plaintiff must show you these facts by the greater weight of the evidence before he can recover."

[9] The eighth exception is a repetition of the foregoing grounds, except the specification that the verdict was in the singular, "For the defendant," instead of in the plural, which calls for no remark.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Dec. 10, 1921.)

1. Witnesses \S 267—Latitude in cross-examination rests largely in trial judge's discretion.

While a wide latitude is allowed in the cross-examination of a witness, such latitude necessarily rests in a large measure in the discretion of the trial judge.

2. Criminal law \S 163(3)—Appellant must show prejudice from restriction on cross-examination.

It is incumbent on appellant to show that he has been prejudiced by the trial judge's ruling restricting the cross-examination of a witness.

3. Criminal law \S 170½(5)—Witnesses \S 270(2)—Exclusion of question asked prosecuting witness on cross-examination held proper, and not prejudicial.

On a trial for assault and battery, where the prosecuting witness testified that defendant asked him to see if he could identify a horse, a question asked him on cross-examination, "If he was going to kill you over there, what good would your identification have done him?" was properly excluded, and its exclusion was not prejudicial, as the witness' answer would have been conjectural, in the nature of an opinion, and immaterial to the issue being tried.

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Union County; Edward McIver, Judge.

Palmer Elders was convicted of assault and battery with intent to kill, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Barron, Barron & Barron, of Union, for appellant.

I. C. Blackwood, Sol., of Spartanburg, and John K. Hamblin, of Union, for the State.

WATTS, J. The defendant was tried at the March term of the court for Union county, before Judge McIver and a jury, charged with an assault and battery with intent to kill, and, after conviction and sentence, appeals.

Earl Meadow, prosecuting witness, for the state, testified that the defendant said to him:

"Come over here. I want you to see if you can identify this horse."

On recross-examination by Mr. Barron, attorney for defendant, the question was asked:

"If he was going to kill you over there, what good would your identification have done him?"

This question was objected to, and the objection was sustained by his honor. The exceptions allege error on the part of his honor and seek reversal.

[1, 2] While a wide latitude is allowed in the cross-examination of a witness, that latitude necessarily rests in the discretion of the trial judge, in a large measure, and, when the judge rules, it is incumbent on the part of the appellant to show that he has been prejudiced by the ruling.

[3] If the witness had been permitted to answer the question, his answer would have been conjectural, in the nature of an opinion, and could not have been in any manner material to the issue being tried. His honor was right in sustaining the objection, and the appellant has been in no manner prejudiced by the ruling.

Exceptions overruled, and judgment affirmed.

(No. 10764.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Dec. 10, 1921.)

Executors and administrators \S 221(5)—Finding that board and lodging was not gratuitous warranted, when there is some evidence of declarations of intention to pay.

Where there was evidence of declarations by decedent, who was claimant's wife's aunt, at the time she came to live with claimant and his wife, and afterwards, concerning her intention to pay for her board, a finding was warranted that the board and lodging was not furnished as a gratuity.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Bamberg County; T. J. Mauldin, Judge.

Proceedings on a claim of H. M. Brabham against Mrs. Lura Brabham, as executrix of Sue Turner, deceased, opposed by T. E. Turner. From an order of the circuit court sustaining the allowance of the claim by the probate judge, T. E. Turner appeals. Affirmed.

The decedent was the aunt of the claimant's wife and had resided with claimant and his wife continuously for several years prior to her death. The claimant's wife testified that there was an agreement when she came to live with them as to paying board; that she said she wanted claimant and his wife to be well paid for providing for her; that the witness had heard her ratify this agreement over and over again; and that at one time decedent gave the claimant a check for board and medical services, stating that it was to go as part payment on what she owed, and that she wished she could pay more. Other witnesses testified to declarations by the decedent that she did not intend claimant to keep her for nothing, but that she had property, and intended him to be paid, and that she could not think of staying with him without paying him. The first three exceptions were to the action of the circuit judge in sustaining the probate court on the grounds (1) that the board and lodging were furnished gratuitously; (2) that there was no express contract between the claimant and deceased as to the payment of board and lodging, and the circumstances did not show clearly that decedent assumed a legal obligation to pay therefor; and (3) that there was no testimony of the payment for board and lodging or of an agreement to pay. The fourth exception was to the holding that the relationship of claimant and deceased was such that the presumption did not apply that the board and lodging were gratuitous.

E. H. Henderson, of Bamberg, and Brown & Bush, of Barnwell, for appellant.

Carter, Carter & Kears, of Bamberg, for respondents.

WATTS, J. This is an appeal from an order of his honor, Judge Mauldin, sustaining the order of probate judge in allowing a claim of Dr. Brabham against the estate of Miss Turner for board and lodging and medical services; the contention being that the claim for board and lodging should not be allowed, as the same were furnished as a gratuity. The exceptions, four in number, are overruled under the authorities of Dash v. Inabinet, 53 S. C. 386, 31 S. E. 297, Wessinger v. Roberts, 67 S. C. 245, 45 S. E. 169, and *Kaminer v. (27 Ga. App. 555)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 16, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Appeal and error \S 1033(5)—Trial \S 228 (1)—Instruction as to owner's right to sell held favorable to him; instruction not erroneous because not embracing another proposition appropriate in connection therewith.

The court did not err in charging as complained of in the fourth ground of the motion for a new trial.

2. Brokers \S 46—Preliminary discussion or tentative agreement between owner and prospective purchaser does not defeat broker's right to commissions.

The portions of the charge referred to in grounds 6, 7, and 8 of the motion for a new trial are not erroneous for any reason alleged.

3. Sufficiency of evidence.

There is evidence to support the verdict.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. Brokers \S 46—"Selling" by owner as affecting broker's right to commissions contemplates a mutually binding and enforceable contract.

A mere preliminary discussion between the owner and prospective purchaser, or a tentative agreement looking to sale, will not deprive an agent of his right to commission, as the word "selling," used in Civ. Code 1910, \S 3587, providing that "the fact that property is placed in the hands of a broker to sell does not prevent the owner from selling unless otherwise agreed," contemplates that the owner and purchaser have entered into a mutually binding and enforceable contract.

Error from Superior Court, Madison County; W. L. Hodges, Judge.

Action by J. L. Moore against G. F. Hawks. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Gordon & Gordon, and Berry T. Moseley, all of Danielsville, for plaintiff in error.

W. M. Smith and John J. Strickland, both of Athens, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Moore sued Hawks, alleging that he had a written contract to sell a described tract of land belonging to Hawks, and that during the term of his agency he found a purchaser for the land "who was ready, able, and willing, and who actually offered, to buy the land in question on the terms stipulated by the defendant;" that the defendant himself, during the term of the agency of the plaintiff, sold the land to other parties, and refused to pay petitioner his commission. In his plea the defendant denied that he ever signed any agency contract giving to plaintiff the right to sell the land, and alleged that he sold it in good faith before the plaintiff brought the purchaser found by him (the plaintiff) before him, and owed the plaintiff nothing. The trial resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and he excepted.

[1] In the light of the entire charge, the judge did not err in telling the jury that—

"There is no reservation in this contract to the effect that Hawks, the owner of the land, did not have the right to sell. That is conceded under the terms of the contract to be the truth."

This charge was favorable to the defendant. Nor was it erroneous because it "was not full enough." In Lucas v. State, 110 Ga. 756(1), 36 S. E. 87, it was held:

"A portion of a charge wherein a complete, accurate, and pertinent proposition is stated is not, in and of itself, erroneous simply because it fails to embrace an instruction which would be appropriate in connection with that proposition."

See, also, Conley v. State, 21 Ga. App. 134, 94 S. E. 261, and cases cited.

Counsel for the plaintiff in error do not argue the fifth ground of the motion for a new trial, but state in their brief that it was stricken by the court.

[4] The word "selling" as used in section 3587 of the Civil Code 1910, in regard to a broker's right to a commission, where this section says, "The fact that property is placed in the hands of a broker to sell does not prevent the owner from selling unless otherwise agreed," contemplates that the owner of the land and the purchaser have entered into a contract that is mutually binding and enforceable. A mere preliminary discussion between the owner and the prospective purchaser, or a tentative agreement looking to the sale, under the evidence, will not deprive the agent of his rights to his commission "when, during the agency, he finds a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy, and who actually offers to buy on the terms stipulated by the owner."

[3] The evidence is sufficient to support the finding of the jury, which has the approval of the trial judge, and this court will not interfere.

ELY et al. v. PHILLIPS et al. (No. 4292.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Nov. 22, 1921.)

1. Logs and logging \S 3(1)—Facts stated held not to justify finding of delivery.

The signing and acknowledgment, by two of three owners of a tract of land of a deed purporting to convey the timber thereon, with right to cut and remove the same within four years, for and in consideration of a large sum of money, payable partly in cash and partly in installments, on account of which a sum less than the cash payment was paid, the placing the same in the hands of the vendees, or one of them, for only an instant, the return thereof to the grantors, the transmission of it by one of them to his wife, for her signature and acknowledgment, and subsequent transmission thereof to the third owner for execution, are not sufficient to justify a finding of delivery of the deed.

2. Frauds, statute of \S 117—Executed deed, though not delivered, is sufficient "memorandum."

A deed, fully and completely signed and acknowledged, though not delivered, is a sufficient memorandum of a contract for the sale of land within the meaning of the statute of frauds.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Memorandum.]

3. Frauds, statute of \S 117—Delivery of memorandum of contract for sale of land not required.

Being in derogation of the common law, and therefore subject to the rule of strict construction, limiting its scope of operation by its terms, the statute of frauds does not require the delivery of a memorandum of a contract for the sale of land.

4. Contracts \S 35—Signers of contract prepared for their and other persons' signatures held not bound until all have signed.

Persons signing a contract prepared for signatures of others to be affixed along with theirs, and intended, as shown by proof, to be signed by all of the parties named in it, are not bound, until all have signed it, and incur no obligation if any of those who were to have signed it have refused to do so.

5. Frauds, statute of \S 115(1)—Memorandum of contract of sale by two or more must be signed by all.

A memorandum of a contract of sale of real estate by two or more persons, to be sufficient under the statute of frauds, must be signed by all of them.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Upshur County.

Suit by Ralph H. Ely and others against Ernest Phillips and others. Decree for the plaintiffs, and the defendants appeal. Reversed, and bill dismissed.

Brannon, Stathers & Stathers and Linn Brannon, all of Weston, for appellants.

Young & McWhorter, of Buckhannon, for appellees.

POFFENBARGER, J. The appellants in this cause, two of three tenants in common of a tract of land, seek reversal of a decree requiring specific performance of an alleged contract for conveyance by them of their interests in the timber on the land to the appellees. They own three-fourths of the land, Ernest Phillips one-fourth, Claude Burr one-half, and a stranger to the suit, J. C. McCoy, the remaining one-fourth.

There is no substantial controversy as to the facts. The appellees, Ralph H. Ely and Lloyd C. Wamsley, proposed to buy the timber on the 285-acre tract of land owned as aforesaid, for $5,000, of which $1,666 was to be paid in cash and the residue in 6 and 12 months, respectively, from the date of the deed, in equal installments bearing interest. Their negotiations were had with Phillips and Burr only, McCoy not being present, and the proposition was accepted and a deed prepared and executed by Phillips and Burr and their wives, and then sent to McCoy, who had been advised of the price at which his associates were willing to sell, and who, it was supposed, would promptly execute it, he having previously expressed satisfaction with the price. For some reason he declined to do so. At the date of execution of the deed by Phillips and Burr, the former accepted a $300 payment on the timber. The bill and decree in this cause are based upon the theory of right in the appellees to have a conveyance of such title as Phillips and Burr can convey, and an abatement of the purchase money proportionate to McCoy's interest in the timber, which it is impossible to obtain.

[1] There is some conflict in the evidence as to whether the deed was delivered by Phillips and Burr, before it was sent to McCoy. Even though it may have been handed to one or both of the plaintiffs the circumstance is not conclusive of delivery, nor strongly probative thereof. It was admittedly handed back for transmission to Burr's wife and to McCoy and its return argues nondelivery with as much force as the other circumstance indicates delivery. Besides, it was incomplete. McCoy had not executed it, nor had Burr's wife. Less than one-fifth of the cash payment had been made. At that time, partial purchase was not considered by any of the parties, as the deed then prepared indicates and the parol evidence proves. The plaintiffs were not then willing to pay $5,000 for three-fourths of it, and are not proposing to do so now. There are no arbitrary rules by which to determine whether a deed has been delivered. Ordinarily, delivery is a question of fact, dependent upon the intention of the parties. Adams v. Baker, 50 W. Va. 249, 40 S. E. 356; Delaplain

v. Grubb, 44 W. Va. 612, 30 S. E. 201, 67 Am. St. Rep. 788. The circumstances here disclosed make it clear that neither a delivery nor an acceptance of the deed in question was intended on the occasion of its preparation and acknowledgment by two of the owners.

[2, 3] If the deed had been signed by all three of the owners, but not delivered, it would have been a sufficient memorandum of the contract of sale, under the statute of frauds. Parrill v. McKinley, 9 Grat. (Va.) 1, 58 Am. Dec. 212; Bowles v. Woodson, 6 Grat. (Va.) 79; Moore, Keppel & Co. v. Ward, 71 W. Va. 393, 76 S. E. 807, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 390, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 263. Although the correctness of the first two of these decisions has been questioned, there is no good reason for doubting it. The statute does not forbid parol contracts. It merely enables a person who has made such a contract respecting any one of certain things to escape from it by prescription of a rule of evidence. It does not say any kind of a contract shall be void if not in writing. It merely denies remedies for enforcement of certain kinds of contracts if pleaded, unless they are in writing, or there are written memoranda of them. The writing need not be the contract, nor the only evidence of it. A memorandum of the terms of a verbal contract, signed by the party to be charged, suffices. Such a memorandum in whosoever hands found, whether delivered by the signer or not, manifestly complies with this requirement. Being in derogation of the common law, the statute is subject to the rule of strict construction, limiting the scope of its operation by its terms. Requirement of delivery of the memorandum would be beyond its terms, and, for reasons already stated, beyond its spirit and purpose as well.

Although the bill alleges a verbal sale of all of the timber, by Phillips and Burr, and the plaintiffs claim it in their testimony, they admit their knowledge of McCoy's interest in the land, expectation of his joinder in the deed, their preparation of a deed providing for his joinder therein, and the transmission of the same to him for acknowledgment by his cotenants. On the other hand, the defendants, in their answer and testimony, deny any purpose or intent on their part to convey the timber without joinder of their cotenant in the deed, and very positively assert intention on the part of all of the parties to the transaction to have consummation thereof by joinder of all of the vendors in the conveyance. The position taken by the defendants is much more consistent with the nature of the subject-matter of the negotiation than that assumed by the plaintiffs. Though a purchase was to be effected by a deed, the subject thereof was not title to a tract of land in fee simple. It was a mere estate in the timber, at the most, as the deed clearly indicates. It purports a conveyance of all of the timber on the tract of land, with certain exceptions, but it contemplates severance and removal thereof within four years from its date. Manifestly, therefore, the plaintiffs sought right to go upon the land and begin the cutting of the timber, soon after the execution and delivery of the deed. Under a conveyance of undivided interests in the timber, they could not have done so. McCoy's right and title extended to every tree on the land, although it was only a fractional interest. Russell v. Tennant, 63 W. Va. 623, 631, 60 S. E. 609, 129 Am. St. Rep. 1024. A deed for the timber, executed only by Phillips and Burr, would have made the plaintiffs tenants in common thereof with McCoy. That relation and title would have conferred upon them no right to cut the timber without his consent. Hardman v. Brown, 77 W. Va. 478, 88 S. E. 1016. Necessarily cognizant of lack of authority in Phillips and Burr to convey his interest in the timber, and also of the embarrassment incident to a grant of a temporary privilege or right upon the tract of land, which he could render practically unavailing and useless to them, the plaintiffs must have contemplated his joinder in the deed.

[4] The authorities are uniform in the holding that persons signing a contract prepared for signatures of other persons, to be affixed along with theirs, and intended to be signed by all of the parties named in it, are not bound until all have signed it, and incur no obligation, if any of those who were to have signed it refuse to do so. Herndon v. Meadows, 86 W. Va. 490, 103 S. E. 404; Bean v. Parker, 17 Mass. 591; Wood v. Washburn, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 24; Howe v. Peabody, 2 Gray (Mass.) 556; Russell v. Annable, 109 Mass. 72, 12 Am. Rep. 665.

This rule, like most others, has its exceptions, founded upon differences in circumstances and purposes as disclosed by the evidence. In the absence of testimony showing that execution by all of the parties was intended, or that prejudice to those executing it by reason of the failure of the others to join, if compelled to perform it, or some other reason or consideration calling for joint execution, the signatures of part of those named in the instrument bind them. Mattoon v. Barnes, 112 Mass. 463; Naylor v. Stene, 96 Minn. 57, 104 N. W. 685; Dillon v. Anderson, 43 N. Y. 231; Whitaker v. Richards, 134 Pa. 191, 19 Atl. 501, 7 L. R. A. 749, 19 Am. St. Rep. 684; Russell v. Freer, 56 N. Y. 67; Hodges v. Hodges, 56 Mass. (2 Cush.) 460; Underhill v. Horwood, 10 Ves. Jr. 209; United Nickle Copper Co. v. Dominion Nickle Copper Co., 11 D. L. R. (Can.) 88. Positive testimony, as well as facts and circumstances, makes it obvious that this case falls within the general rule, not the exception.

[5] That a contract of sale of real estate by two or more persons, to be sufficient under the statute of frauds must be signed by all of them, has been judicially affirmed on more than one occasion. Snyder v. Neefus, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 63; Reynolds v. Dunkirk, etc., Ry. Co., 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 614; Johnson v. Brook, 31 Miss. 17, 66 Am. Dec. 547; 29 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. 858. The reason for this holding is that until signed by all of the parties, the contract is incomplete. As a memorandum stands in the place of the contract and performs its function, when the contract is verbal and only a memorandum is relied upon, it must necessarily be governed by the same rule. Lacking the signature of McCoy, the deed is not a sufficient memorandum of the verbal contract claimed, if, indeed, there ever was a complete verbal contract. As none of the parties were authorized to bind McCoy, there does not seem to have been such a contract.

These principles and conclusions make it apparent that the plaintiffs are not entitled to the relief sought by their bill; wherefore the decree complained of will be reversed and the bill dismissed.

WILSON v. FLEMING et al. (No. 4263.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 22, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Appeal and error \S 977(3) — Judgment awarding new trial reversed only for manifest error.

A judgment awarding a new trial of an action will not be reversed unless it is manifestly erroneous.

2. Damages \S 24 — For future permanent consequences for personal injury must be certain, not remote or speculative.

To form the basis of a legal recovery for the future permanent consequence of the wrongful infliction of a personal injury, it must appear with reasonable certainty that such consequences will result from the injury. Possible or probable future injurious effects are too remote and speculative.

3. Highways \S 184(2) — Testimony as to how an automobile was being driven just before collision held admissible.

Where the speed and manner in which an automobile is driven when a collision occurs is one of the issues to be determined by a jury upon conflicting evidence, testimony tending to show that one of the colliding cars was being driven on a public road in a dangerous or uncertain manner, or at an extraordinary rate of speed, a few minutes before the collision, should, when offered, be submitted to the jury.

4. Negligence ⚡125—Evidence of former acts incompetent.

Evidence of former and remote negligent acts is incompetent to prove whether a person did or did not do the same or similar act of negligence on another particular occasion.

5. Time ⚡5—Where process is returned on first Monday of March, a declaration filed on first Monday in June is in time.

If a process duly executed is returned at March rules, 1917, to the office of the clerk who issued it, the declaration is filed in time within the meaning of section 7, chapter 125, Code (sec. 4761), if delivered to the clerk and filed by him June 4, 1917; March 5 and June 4 being respectively the first Monday of each of these months in 1917.

6. Evidence ⚡83(1)—Presumed that a public officer has performed his duty.

Unless the contrary clearly appears, the presumption ordinarily is that a public officer performs the duties required of him by law.

7. Evidence ⚡83(6)—Where circuit court clerk does not dismiss suit where declaration is not filed in time, the presumption is that he received it within statutory limit.

If a circuit court clerk does not dismiss a suit, as he is required to do, if a declaration is not filed in his office within the time prescribed by section 7, chapter 125, Code (sec. 4761), and if it be questionable whether he received and filed it within the time so required, the presumption is that he did receive and file it within the statutory time limit; there being no clear and convincing proof that it was not so received or filed.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

8. Appeal and error ⚡699(2)—Cross-assignments as to instructions not in the record or bill of exceptions cannot be considered.

Cross-assignments, questioning court's action upon instructions, cannot be considered where not in the record and not made a part of the bill of exceptions, where Code Supp. 1918, c. 131, § 23 (sec. 4930b), as amended by Acts 1921, c. 68, even if applicable, was not in force when the case was tried.

9. Appeal and error ⚡692(1)—Record should show purport of excluded testimony.

Without an avowal of the purport of an answer contemplated, it does not appear whether appellant proponent was prejudiced by the ruling preventing the witness from answering.

Error to Circuit Court, Harrison County.

Action by George W. Wilson against Boyd S. Fleming and another. A verdict for the plaintiff was set aside, and the plaintiff brings error. Affirmed and remanded for retrial.

James C. McManaway and J. Philip Clifford, both of Clarksburg, for plaintiff in error.

Homer W. Williams, Carl W. Neff, and Melvin G. Sperry, all of Clarksburg, for defendants in error.

LYNCH, J. George W. Wilson sued to recover damages for injuries sustained in a collision of an automobile in which he was riding with another, operated by an agent of defendants, Boyd S. Fleming and Lloyd W. Groves, doing business as Auto Livery Company. The trial court having set aside as excessive a verdict for $6,000, plaintiff brings the case here for review.

At the time of the accident, Wilson, in company with Claude Maxwell and two men named Williams, were driving from Clarksburg on the West Milford turnpike; their purpose being to examine some standing timber, which plaintiff proposed cutting for Maxwell. The machine in which they were riding had originally been a five-passenger touring car, but prior to the accident was converted into a light truck, the body and top having been removed, and a wooden truck body and two bucket seats substituted. Maxwell, the owner and driver, occupied one of these seats and plaintiff the other, the two Williams brothers being seated on the gasoline tank at the rear end of the truck body.

The collision occurred at a sharp turn in the highway, at a point where, because of a high bank, neither driver could see a great distance ahead. The evidence is contradictory as to which, if either, of the drivers was at fault. Maxwell and his companions testify that they were as near the right edge of the road as safety in making the turn would permit, and that their speed could not have been more than 8 to 10 miles per hour, that defendants' car negligently cut in towards them when the automobiles were but a few feet apart, and that it crashed into them at a speed of from 20 to 30 miles an hour. Defendants, on the other hand, insist with equal emphasis that Maxwell's car was not in a condition to be driven upon the highway, and in fact was so much of a wreck that even its appearance was notice to a passenger of its unsafe condition; that their driver, not Maxwell, was driving at a moderate rate of speed, about 12 miles per hour, when Maxwell "whipped the car around the corner," when it was too late to avoid the accident by driving between Maxwell's car and the bank on their right.

However contradictory the testimony as to the negligence of the drivers may appear to be, the car in which plaintiff was riding was damaged by the impact, and plaintiff was thrown violently to the ground, thereby sustaining injuries more or less severe and for which the jury compensated him in an amount which the trial court deemed excessive and unwarranted by the evidence.

As upon this point the case is to be considered and determined it is necessary to dwell upon the injuries sustained by plaintiff. Immediately following the collision, he "seemed to be doing an awful lot of complaining about his breathing. He could not hardly get his breath, and when he did get it he hallowed." Some one assisted him in walking to a nearby house, and shortly afterward carried him in another automobile to a hospital in Clarksburg. There an examination by Dr. Haynes, a witness in the case for plaintiff, disclosed that—"He had a fracture of one or more ribs. The upper part of the left side of his chest * * * and lung tissue evidently had been punctured by the ribs more or less at least, and [he] coughed and spit up blood, as I recollect it."

His lungs were congested within a few hours after the accident and in a day or two he developed pneumonia, with a temperature of 104½. After eight or nine days in the hospital he removed to a hotel, where he remained an additional two weeks, still under the care of a physician, at the expiration of which time he was so far recovered as to permit of his return to his home in Richwood. There he resided one week, after which, with his wife and two children, he removed to the farm of Claude Maxwell near Clarksburg. This was in the fall of 1916, and he continued at Maxwell's throughout the winter, or, according to Maxwell, until corn-planting time. During this period he did light work at intervals, feeding cattle, husking corn, etc., but the chief value of his presence, if we may credit Maxwell, arose from the service of plaintiff's wife, who cooked for other employees upon the premises. Subsequent to his residence on Maxwell's farm, plaintiff's place of abode and ability to work are disputed. That he did little, however, seems fairly well established, but whether this abstinence was due, as he claims, to physical disability produced by the accident or, as defendants allege, to natural aversion and indisposition to work, the evidence is inconclusive.

Assuming, however, that his inactivity was the result of the injuries, was not the verdict an inordinate amount? It was shown in the proof that the plaintiff, prior to this collision, was accustomed to receive a wage of $50 to $60 per month. At this rate, the impairment of his earning capacity during the three years between the date of the accident and the trial could not have caused him a loss of more than $2,200. What then as to the balance of the jury's verdict? True, one injured by the fault of another is entitled to some recompense for suffering and inconvenience, but the facts warrant no such finding on that account. There is, as we see it, but one explanation, that is, that there was an attempt to compensate plaintiff for injuries believed by the jury to be of a permanent character. Can such belief be supported by any proper construction of the facts?

[1] At this point and before answering the query, it is proper to recall the doctrine long since recognized by this and other courts, that an order setting aside a verdict is entitled to peculiar respect. Miller v. Insurance Co., 12 W. Va. 116, 29 Am. Rep. 452; Black v. Thomas, 21 W. Va. 709; Reynolds v. Tompkins, 23 W. Va. 229; Coalmer v. Barrett, 61 W. Va. 237, 56 S. E. 385. As it is the province of the trial court alone to view the appearance and conduct of the jurors, parties, and witnesses in the trial, the soundness of the above rule is obvious. See Shipley v. Virginian Ry. Co., 87 W. Va. 139, 104 S. E. 297. In view of this well-established practice it is therefore necessary in reaching our conclusion to respect the order of the trial court.

[2] Analysis of the evidence as to the effect of the injury upon plaintiff's physical condition suggests that plaintiff probably relied largely upon the answers to two questions, one directed to Dr. Wilson, and the other to Dr. Haynes. The first of these elicited information as to whether the impairment of the lung tissue was permanent; the answer to which was:

"I should think so. It has existed now for about nine months, according to my (X-ray) pictures."

The other, directed to Dr. Haynes, was:

"Do you consider this plaintiff so disabled and so afflicted with tuberculosis as that he is unable to work?"

The answer was:

"I have seen people working that has more tuberculosis than he has, but I do not consider him able to take a hard job and keep it."

The latter opinion, though frank, is of little consequence. The tuberculosis with which it was testified plaintiff was afflicted at the time of the trial was of the kind characterized by the physician as "latent," a malady not uncommon amongst "a great majority of people daily seen on the street." That its existence was the result of the injuries of which plaintiff complains is conjectural. The disease may, in some instances, be caused by injuries to the lung tissues, such as plaintiff is alleged to have suffered, but whether such was actually the case here it is not proper to hazard a guess. While at the time of the accident he "looked to be a man of good nutrition and muscular" and "better nourished" than at the date of the trial, there is nothing to enlighten us as to the existence or nonexistence of the disease, later discovered to be present. The evidence, therefore, is insufficient to establish a causal connection between the collision and the subsequent tubercular inoculation.

As Dr. Wilson's examination of plaintiff was admittedly superficial, his opinion that the impairment of the lung tissue was of a permanent character must have been, as he says, predicated upon the continuation of the condition, as shown by his X-ray pictures, the first taken in January, 1919, and the second in the next ensuing September, a few days prior to the trial. The testimony of the two expert witnesses, Drs. Wilson and Haynes, and especially that of the former, was speculative and uncertain in quality, due no doubt to the meager opportunity to acquaint him self with plaintiff's condition three years after the date of the injury. If he and Dr. Haynes, two competent physicians and surgeons, were unable after a treatment by one of them, and a more or less casual examination by the other, to discover an immediate connection between the injury and a disqualification of a permanent character to perform labor such as plaintiff had been able to perform before the injury, how could the jury reach such a conclusion as would warrant a verdict for permanent injuries, based solely upon the expert evidence? These witnesses exhibited on their examination commendable caution, qualifying their answers when pressed to express in positive terms their conviction as to the cause and probable continuation and growth of the tubercular infection. Their silence as to the extent the impaired condition of the lung tissues would or might affect the plaintiff's health or earning power is suggestive. This omission, when considered with other testimony, seems insufficient to establish even an approximate conception of an enduring disqualification for manual labor, and therefore sufficient to sustain the trial court's action upon defendant's motion for another trial.

According to an abundance of authority:

"The future effect of an injury upon the earning capacity of the person injured must be shown with reasonable certainty to authorize a recovery of damages for a permanent injury. A mere conjecture or even a probability does not warrant the giving of damages for a future disability which may never be realized." Louisville Sou. Ry. Co. v. Minogue, 90 Ky. 369, 14 S. Testimony as to what might happen as the result of an accident is not competent.

Briggs v. New York, etc., Ry. Co., 177 N. Y. 59, 69 N. E. 223, 101 Am. St. Rep. 718. That plaintiff may suffer as a consequence of an accident is too broad as a basis of a recovery as for a permanent injury (Melone v. Sierra Ry. Co., 151 Cal. 113, 91 Pac. 522), as he may be "liable to suffer" (Green v. Catawba P. Co., 75 S. C. 102, 55 S. E. 125, 9 Ann. Cas. 1050). Reasonable certainty that future pain and suffering or loss of capacity to work will follow must be proved to warrant a verdict based on injuries of a permanent character. Great Western Ry. Co. v. Bailey, 9 Kan. App. 207, 59 Pac. 659; Hardy v. Milwaukee Street Ry. Co., 89 Wis. 183, 61 N. W. 771; Sanders v. O'Callaghan, 111 Iowa, 574, 82 N. W. 969; Hall v. Cedar Rapids, etc., Ry. Co., 115 Iowa, 18, 88 N. W. 739.

"Future consequences, which are reasonably expected to follow an injury, may be given in evidence for the purpose of enhancing the damages to be awarded. But to entitle such apprehended consequences to be considered by the jury, they must be such as in the ordinary course of nature are reasonably certain to ensue. Consequences which are contingent, speculative, or merely possible are not proper to be considered in ascertaining the damages. * * * To entitle a plaintiff to recover present damages for apprehended future consequences, there must be such a degree of probability of their occurring as amounts to a reasonable certainty that they will result from the original injury." Sedgwick, Damages (9th Ed.) § 172, citing Strohm v. New York, L. E. & W. Ry. Co., 96 N. Y. 305.

[3, 4] As one of several cross-errors assigned by defendants, they urge that the court erred in refusing certain evidence as to the condition of Maxwell's automobile. This evidence consisted of testimony relative to the presence and condition of such equipment as fenders, dashboard, cutout valve, fan, lights, horn, speedometer, springs, etc., apparatus with which automobiles are generally equipped. In view of the court's actual rulings on the admission of the testimony, we regard this contention as unfounded. True, certain statements concerning the absence or defective condition of some of the parts mentioned were excluded, but as it was not shown in what way, if any, their presence or absence was of importance so far as the collision was concerned, we see no error in their rejection. As it is well known that the external appearance of an automobile is a very uncertain test of its running condition, defendants' theory of imputed negligence has little application. The court did admit the testimony of Harris as to the condition of the brakes and springs, in so far as the operating of the car was affected thereby, and granted defendant express permission to recall plaintiff's witnesses and question them on the subject, which opportunity had formerly in part been denied. While not detailing each of the points raised, we are not of opinion to disturb the court's rulings on this line of the evidence. If, however, it shall appear upon a retrial of the case that there is some causal relation between the infliction of the injury and the condition of the Maxwell automobile, as affecting the power of the driver to control it or to give the required warning of its approach, its condition may properly become a subject of proof. Such an instrument when driven, as often as they are, with a reckless disregard of the rights of others lawfully on a highway, is a source of grave danger.

Defendants further insist upon their claim of right to introduce evidence tending to show Maxwell's reputation as a reckless driver. That evidence of this character is incompetent is so well established as to admit of little comment. Evidence of negligence on former occasions is inadmissible for the purpose of proving whether a person did or did not do a particular act in question. Pugley v. Tyler, 130 Ark. 491, 197 S. W. 1177; Luiz v. Falvey, 228 Mass. 253, 117 N. E. 308; Todd v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 197 Ill. App. 544; Noonan v. Maus, 197 Ill. App. 103; Louisville Lozler Co. v. Sallee, 167 Ky. 499, 180 S. W. 841; 22 C. J. 749, title, Evidence, § 838, note 66. In all the cases cited, the testimony in question related to the customary conduct of automobile drivers in regard to their observance of various rules of prudent driving, and in all of them the appellate courts discountenanced such evidence, in so far as its bearing upon a particular act was concerned.

Defendants also charge as error the rejection by the trial court of the evidence of Frank M. Powell, who testified that he, also driving an automobile, passed the Maxwell car about one-half mile from the place of the accident, at which time Maxwell either "could not steer it very good or it was a big car going around the turn there, and he ran pretty close to the Ford in which I was riding, and he was running at—I would not like to say right now—I suppose 30 miles an hour. * * *" This testimony having been heard in the jury's absence, the court excluded it as irrelevant.

This ruling deserves and requires more than passing scrutiny. While the fact, if fact it be, that Maxwell was driving in a dangerous manner or at an excessive rate of speed, while a half mile distant from the scene of the collision, does not prove, or indeed create a presumption of, the fact that he was driving in a similar way when the accident occurred, nevertheless the inference which the jury might properly have drawn from such conduct is of sufficient probative value to justify its admission. Davies v. Barnes, 201 Ala. 120, 77 S. 612; Wigginton's Adm'r v. Rickert, 186 Ky. 650, 217 S. W. 933. As there was evidence also that Maxwell's car was driving very rapidly when the cars collided, the relevancy of the testimony becomes more apparent. Tyrrell v. Goslant, 93 Vt. 63, 106 Atl. 585; Wellman v. Mead, 93 Vt. 322, 107 Atl. 396. See, also, Portsmouth Street Ry. Co. v. Peed, 102 Va. 662, 47 S. E. 850, and Hilary v. Minneapolis Street Ry. Co., 104 Minn. 432, 116 N. W. 933. Although questions as to the remoteness or relevancy of testimony are generally within the trial court's discretion, there are instances where the circumstances are such that the act in question, while perhaps somewhat remote, is not sufficiently irrelevant to render it inadmissible as a matter of law, and it may have such probative value and legal relevancy that the inferences which may be drawn therefrom are clearly proper for the jury. Evidence which tends "in an appreciable degree to sustain a material issue of facts" is admissible. (Lyons v. Fairmont Real Estate Co., 71 W. Va. 754, 77 S. E. 525), and "the safer and more satisfactory rule is for the court to admit whatever is relevant, and leave the question of weight for the jury." State v. Yates, 21 W. Va. 761. The testimony given by Powell as to the operation of the automobile only a few minutes before the collision was pertinent and admissible under the circumstances proved.

[5-7] Among other cross-assignments of error is the adverse ruling of the trial court upon defendants' motion to dismiss the action, because the plaintiff failed to file the declaration within three months after the return of the process executed as required by section 7, chapter 125, Code (sec. 4761), under penalty of dismissal, if not so filed in the office of the court's clerk within that time. The sheriff served the process soon after it was issued and returned it on March 5, 1917, or the first Monday of that month. Plaintiff delivered the declaration to the clerk, and the clerk filed it at the rules held June 4, 5, and 6. As the process was by its command returnable to March rules, it was necessary to return it on the first rule day, or March 5. To ascertain the termination of the three-month period, within which a declaration must be filed, or the action dismissed at rules by the clerk, the number of days in the intervening months or part of a month is to be disregarded, and the time is to be computed from a date in one month to a corresponding date in another, intended by the statute. Bank v. Baird, 72 W. Va. 716, 79 S. E. 738. As the clerk did not dismiss the suit as he should have done had the declaration not been filed in obedience to the direction of the section, it must be assumed that he filed it on June 4, the presumption being that a public officer discharges the duties required of him by statute. The court did not err in the ruling.

[8] Another cross-assignment questions the action of the court upon instructions. These we cannot consider, because they are not in-the record, and not made part of it by a bill of exception, and section 23, chapter 181, Code 1918, as amended by chapter 68, Acts 1921, even if applicable, not being in force when the case was tried.

[8] Finally, the defendants cross-assign as erroneous the refusal to permit an answer to a question propounded to Claude Maxwell to elicit information as to a release by plaintiff of his claim for damages as a result of the accident. Without an avowal of the purport of the answer contemplated, it does not appear whether the proponents were prejudiced by the ruling.

As there appears to be no error in the judgment, it is affirmed, and the case is remanded for retrial.

BROWN v. BROWN et al. (No. 4433.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 25, 1921. Rehearing Denied
Dec. 9, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Appeal and error \S 150(3)—Trustee holding legal title may appeal from decree affecting beneficiary's rights.

A trustee holding the legal title to lands, or an interest in lands, has the right to prosecute an appeal from a decree affecting the rights of his cestui que trust.

2. Injunction \S 23, 35(1)—Will not be granted where plaintiff's interest is remote and great hardship would be inflicted on others.

An injunction will not be granted where it appears that the interest of the plaintiff which is sought to be protected is very remote, and almost beyond the realm of possibility, and that to grant the relief would inflict great hardship upon the parties against whom it is sought.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County.

Suit by C. L. Brown against E. W. Brown and others. Injunctions granted, and the defendants appeal. Reversed, injunction dissolved, and cause remanded, with instruction to dismiss the bill.

Chas. G. Peters, of Union, Morton & Mohler, of Charleston, S. P. Bell, of Spencer, and Somerville & Somerville, of Point Pleasant, for appellants.

J. L. Wolfe and M. C. Archer, both of Ripley, for appellee.

RITZ, P. Robert S. Brown died in the year 1891, leaving a considerable estate, consisting of real property located in the county of Jackson, which by his will he provided should be divided among his three sons, each taking a life estate in the land assigned to him, with remainder to the heirs of his body lawfully begotten living at the time of his death, and, should there be no such lawfully begotten heirs, then to the other two sons for their respective lives, with remainder to the heirs of their bodies. The defendant E. W. Brown, under the provisions of the will, received a tract of land containing several hundred acres. The plaintiff, C. L. Brown, was assigned a like tract of land adjoining that of E. W. Brown, and the other brother, W. J. Brown, took the remainder of the land. This controversy arises out of an attempt of E. W. Brown and his children to dispose of part of the land devised to them.

The bill avers that E. W. Brown has nine living children, all of whom are adults, and most of whom are married and have children. It appears that some time since E. W. Brown, together with his children, secured a loan of $12,000 from the Virginian Joint Stock Land Bank, and executed a mortgage to secure the payment of the same. This debt was not paid and suit was brought in the circuit court of Jackson county for the purpose of subjecting the said real estate to sale in satisfaction of said lien. Pending this suit E. W. Brown and his children entered into a contract with the Bowman Land Company by which that company agreed to lay off in town lots a small part of the said land, consisting of 25 to 40 acres, and sell the same for a sufficient sum of money to pay off all the liens; the said E. W. Brown and his children agreeing to convey the same to the purchasers by deeds with covenants of general warranty. The Bowman Land Company, acting under this contract, went upon the land and laid off the tract proposed to be sold into lots, streets, and alleys, and advertised a sale of the same to be made at public auction. The plaintiff then filed his bill in the circuit court of Jackson county, averring that he is a brother of the said defendant E. W. Brown, and that as such he has a contingent remainder in the said land, which will become vested in case E. W. Brown survives all of his descendants, and also averring that E. W. Brown has cut some timber off of said land, and was then committing waste thereon by cutting saplings and removing the same; and prayed that the said E. W. Brown and his nine children, who are made defendants to the bill, be enjoined from making any sale of the land in parcels, but that any sale made by them be limited to their interest in the whole tract, and that said E. W. Brown also be enjoined from committing any acts of waste upon said land by cutting or removing the timber therefrom, which injunction was granted, and was afterward extended to include a larger territory upon an amended bill being filed. The defendant E. W. Brown, upon notice to the plaintiff, moved the circuit court of Jackson county in session on the 24th of August, 1921, to dissolve the injunctions granted as aforesaid, which motion the court overruled, and from the decree refusing to dissolve said injunctions, or either of them, this appeal is prosecuted.

[1] It is first insisted that we should not entertain the appeal, for the reason that E. W. Brown does not appear to have such an interest in the subject-matter as warrants him in prosecuting the same. It appears that under the will of his father E. W. Brown took a life estate in the tract of land, a small part of which is involved here, with the remainder to the heirs of his body surviving him; and, in case he died without having surviving heirs of his body, then the same should go to the plaintiff, C. L. Brown, and his brother W. J. Brown for their lives, with remainder to the heirs of their bodies surviving them. Some time since the defendant E. W. Brown made a deed attempting to convey his life estate to his wife, and it is contended that because of this deed he has no such interest remaining as justifies him in prosecuting this appeal. It is quite well settled in this jurisdiction that by the deed conveying his estate direct to his wife he parted with his entire equitable interest in the property, but the legal title thereto still remains in him. He is a trustee holding that legal title for the benefit of the owners of the equitable estate. It is true he is a naked trustee, but an action of unlawful detainer to recover possession of the property would have to be instituted in his name because the legal title is in him. A trustee in a deed of trust without any interest whatever in the subject-matter may prosecute an appeal for the purpose of vindicating the rights of his cestui que trust. Hall v. Bank of Virginia, 14 W. Va. 584; 3 C. J. 656. E. W. Brown has just as much interest in the subject-matter here as the trustee in such a deed of trust. It is true he cannot sell the property and cannot convey the legal title without the authority of the cestui que trust, neither can the trustee in a deed of trust given to secure a debt, but he has the right, and under some circumstances it may become his duty, to prosecute such legal proceedings as may be necessary and appropriate to vindicate the rights of the cestui que trust.

[2] It is further insisted that the motion to dissolve the injunctions was properly overruled, for the reason that none of the defendants answered the bill except E. W. Brown, and that the court should not dissolve the temporary injunctions upon the answer of one joint defendant. This might be entirely true if the motion to dissolve was based upon the denial of the allegations of the bills. The motion here, however, is based upon the insufficiency of the bills for the granting of the injunctions. If it should turn out that the injunctions should not have been granted in the first instance, they should be dissolved upon the motion of any proper party to the suit.

And this brings us to a consideration of the substantial question involved, and that is whether from the bill it appears that the plaintiff, C. L. Brown, is likely to suffer any injury from the acts complained of, such as will justify injunctions against the defendants at his instance. It is quite true that a court of equity will in some instances enjoin the commission of waste at the suit of a contingent remainderman, but it must be borne in mind that courts of equity will not make use of the extraordinary writ of injunction to preserve mere doubtful or possible rights. There must be some reasonable apprehension of loss to the plaintiff before the court will interfere. High on Injunctions, §§ 9 and 10; Joyce on Injunctions, §§ 17 and 24; 14 R. C. L. title "Injunctions," § 57. Upon the facts in this case, does C. L. Brown have such a contingent interest as justifies the interposition of a court of equity to prevent E. W. Brown and his children from dealing with their estate? It appears that E. W. Brown is now 66 years of age; that he has nine living children, all of whom are adults, and most of whom are married and have children. The only possible contingency upon which C. L. Brown can ever have any interest in this property is that E. W. Brown will outlive all of his nine children and all of his numerous grandchildren or great grandchildren, should any be born prior to his death. To enjoin E. W. Brown and his children from cutting up part of this land into town lots and selling the same, it sufficiently appears, would work serious injury to them. By the onward march of progress part of the property has become valuable as urban real estate, and from a few acres of it enough money can be realized to discharge all of the liens against the whole tract of land. The plaintiff seeks to prevent the accomplishment of this purpose, and why? Because, as he says, he wants to keep the large landed estate of his father in the same condition that it was when his father died, so that it might pass on to himself in the possible contingency that his brother E. W. Brown will survive all of his children and grandchildren, and he survive that brother, and then pass it on to his only daughter as an entire estate. Such sentimental reasons may have weight with particular individuals, but they do not justify a court of equity in inflicting a serious inconvenience and injury upon other interested parties. We are of opinion that the possibility of injury to C. L. Brown from the acts complained of is so remote and so inconsequential, if he should ever become vested with any interest, and the injury to E. W. Brown and his children would be so substantial, that a court of equity would not be warranted in granting any relief upon the bills filed.

We will therefore dissolve the injunctions and remand the cause to the circuit court of Jackson county, with instructions to dismiss the bills.

MILLER, J., absent.

(89 W. Va. 652)

GROVE et al. v. LONG. (No. 4268.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 29, 1921.)

1. Trusts \S 244—Legal title in trustees descends to trustees' heirs before completion of trust.

Legal title to land, vested in trustees to hold for the benefit of a corporation, with right in it to full beneficial use of the property and power to direct transfers and conveyances thereof, and fill vacancies occasioned by resignation or death of any of the trustees or their successors, descends to the heirs of the trustees, on the death of all of them, before disposition of the land and in the absence of a revocation of the trust.

2. Injunction \S 118(2)—Bill held sufficiently to allege equitable title in plaintiffs.

If an allegation of ownership of land by the plaintiffs in a bill in equity, accompanied by an exhibited deed tending to contradict it by reason of irregularity or defect in the execution thereof, is supplemented by allegations of a purchase of the land for a valuable consideration by the plaintiffs and willingness of the grantor to execute to them such further conveyances or assurances as may be necessary to pass such title as he has, the bill sufficiently alleges equitable title in the plaintiffs.

3. Injunction \S 36(2)—Equitable title may be protected by injunctive relief, even though disputed.

As the owner of a merely equitable title to real estate cannot be entertained in a court of law for vindication thereof or redress of wrongs done to it, he may resort to equity for injunctive relief, under circumstances warranting such relief, even though his title is disputed, without an allegation of the pendency of an action at law to determine the question of title or intention to commence it.

4. Injunction \S 118(2)—General allegation of ownership sufficient for final injunction.

In such a bill, a general allegation of ownership of the land by the plaintiffs will suffice for an injunction by way of final decree, wherefore a demurrer thereto on the ground of insufficiency of statement of title ought to be overruled.

5. Injunction \S 144 — Allegations failing to show perfect title insufficient for preliminary injunction.

But such an allegation, unaided by an affidavit stating facts sufficient, if proved, to make out a case of perfect title by deraignment from the state or a common source, by adverse possession or otherwise, does not constitute a sufficient basis for award of a preliminary injunction.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hampshire County.

Suit by John W. Grove and others against Jacob W. Long. Bill dismissed on demurrer, and temporary injunction dissolved, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed in part and reversed in part, and remanded.

J. S. Zimmerman, of Romney, for appellants.

John J. Cornwell and Ira V. Cowgill, both of Romney, for appellees.

POFFENBARGER, J. On the ground of lack of disclosure of sufficient title in the plaintiffs, the bill in this cause, seeking an injunction to prevent the cutting and removal of timber from land they claim, was dismissed on demurrer, and the temporary injunction awarded thereon, dissolved by the decree from which they have appealed.

The bill does not fully nor clearly disclose the origin of the controversy, but enough appears on its face to indicate a dispute founded upon an interlock between conveyances or an uncertainty as to the location of a boundary line. Defendant's claim of right is admittedly based upon a purchase of timber from a third person, who is likely the owner of land adjoining that claimed by the plaintiffs, although his entry upon the premises with his sawmill is denominated a bare trespass in the bill.

If, as it seems, the plaintiffs have only equitable title to the land, if any, it will be unnecessary to examine the bill with reference to the rules applicable to equity jurisdiction by injunction against the cutting of timber in violation of the rights of the holder of legal title to land. In that class of cases, there are limitations upon the right of access to the equity forum, if any issues of fact are disclosed. Freer v. Davis, 52 W. Va. 1, 43 S. E. 164, 59 L. R. A. 556, 94 Am. St. Rep. 895; Curtin v. Stout, 57 W. Va. 271, 278, 50 S. E. 810; Pardee v. Lumber Co., 70 W. Va. 68, 73 S. E. 82, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 262.

The plaintiffs have equitable, but not legal, title to the 104-acre tract, a part of which is in controversy. The title, as far as pleaded, begins with a deed from John S. Winslow, trustee for the Mount Savage Iron Company, to Franklin H. Delano and James Roosevelt, as trustees for the Union Mining Company, dated June 29, 1872. That deed placed the equitable title in the Union Mining Company and the legal title in the trustees. It imposed upon the trustees no active duty, and may be said to have created a mere dry trust. They were to permit their cestui que trust to have the full beneficial use of the property and to transfer and convey it or any part of it to such person or persons as the company should direct, in a prescribed manner, and not otherwise to dispose of it. In case of a vacancy by death or resignation of either of the trustees or any successor, the company was authorized to fill it by appointment. By deed dated January 24, 1910, the Union Mining Company, without joinder of the trustees, who died prior to the date thereof, conveyed the surface of the land to John W. Grove, Joseph T. Davis, Thomas D. Davis, and Chas. S. Swisher. It retained the minerals, together with extensive mining privileges and rights. By a deed dated January 29, 1912, the Davises conveyed their interest to Grove, and, by another deed, dated November 11, 1913, Swisher conveyed his interest to Grove and Irvin B. Michael, the plaintiffs in the bill.

[1] Nothing perceived in the nature of the trust created by the deed of Winslow takes it out of the general rule as to the duration thereof. Intention that it should continue during the existence of the corporation, or until the property should be disposed of by them, at its instance, is so clearly and positively expressed as to leave no room for doubt about it, and, while it continued, the trustees held the legal title. At the date of the deed the property had not been disposed of by them and their cestui que trust was still in being, and its purposes not fully accomplished. An allegation of the amended bill impliedly says it is still in existence. On the death of a trustee, without termination of the trust, the legal title held by him descends to his heirs. Blake v. O'Neal, 63 W. Va. 483, 61 S. E. 410, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147. Of course, the deed, if validly executed, passed the equitable title of the corporation.

[3] Clothed with such title the plaintiffs have clear right of access to a court of equity for vindication of it and redress of wrongs done in respect thereof. It is not necessary for them to show inadequacy of the legal remedies, for a court of law cannot entertain them at all in respect of their title to that land. As, in the opening paragraph of their bill, but not elsewhere, they allege their joint ownership of the land, they have made a showing of title that would suffice in a bill for ordinary relief, such as acquisition of the legal title and removal of cloud therefrom. But this bill does not seek relief of that class. It invokes the extraordinary remedy of injunction, wherefore the vital inquiry is whether it alleges title with sufficient particularity to subserve the purposes of a prayer for injunction.

An injunction by way of final decree is not essentially different in principle from any form of ordinary relief. It is not awarded until after a full hearing upon the merits, and general allegations of title may be reduced to absolute certainty by the proof. If, in a bill for such relief, the defendant is apprised, in general terms, of the plaintiff's cause of action he has reasonable notice of the nature thereof, and nothing more is required. Zell Guano Co. v. Heatherly, 38 W. Va. 409, 18 S. E. 611; State v. McEldowney, 54 W. Va. 695, 47 S. E. 650.

But a preliminary injunction is a drastic remedy, restraining, forbidding, or commanding action on the part of the defendant, in advance of a hearing and determination of the controversy. It operates as a restraint upon his liberty and alters the condition of things existing at the date of award thereof. For remedies of that class a more definite and particular showing should be made in some way, and, if the bill alone is relied upon as the basis of the application therefor, as it is here, it should allege the facts clearly showing the grounds of relief, including title, when it is an essential element thereof. A mere general allegation of title or ownership may be untrue and misleading, and, if allowed as a sufficient basis of award of a preliminary injunction, the defendant's liberty of action is taken away, his position changed, or his right wrongfully invaded, until he disproves it. Such a result is inconsistent with the theory of extraordinary remedies. An observation made in Peerless Carbon Black Co. v. Gillespie, 87 W. Va. 441, 460, 105 S. E. 517, 524, classing preliminary injunctions with attachments and receiverships, is believed to be sound in principle. In view of the discretion and power of the court to modify or dissolve an injunction, it may not be so drastic in its operation as an attachment, but they are of the same nature, because each goes into operation and effect in advance of the adjudication on the merits.

Here, as elsewhere, it is held that, to obtain a temporary injunction against a trespass upon real estate, the plaintiff must establish a perfect title in himself, and that the bill must allege it. To avail, the title must be not only good but undisputed, unless the injunction is sought in aid of an action at law to vindicate it, pending or intended to be instituted. Schoonover v. Bright, 24 W. Va. 698; Cox v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 175; Kemble v. Cresap, 26 W. Va. 603; Watson v. Ferrell, 34 W. Va. 406, 12 S. E. 724; Western M. & M. Co. v. Coal Co., 10 W. Va. 250; McMillan v. Ferrell, 7 W. Va. 223; Freer v. Davis, 52 W. Va. 1, 43 S. E. 164, 59 L. R. A. 556, 94 Am. St. Rep. 895. In most of these cases all of which involved preliminary injunctions the jurisdiction failed for reasons other than defective statement of title; but, in all of them, allegation of good and undisputed title, with the exception above noted, was required. That can only mean precaution against disturbance of existing conditions, in the absence of a showing of clear prima facie right to the extraordinary relief sought. It is obvious that a mere general allegation of title, omitting the facts upon which it is based, if permitted, would often result in what this rule is intended to prevent. It can only be avoided by requirement in the bill of allegations substantially conforming to the essential elements of proof required of the plaintiff in an action of ejectment. In the absence of an allegation of a common source of title, facts requisite to title by adverse possession, or some other exonerating circumstance, the bill should deraign title from the state. Nothing less can amount to a statement of facts from which the court can see prima facie title in the plaintiff. A preliminary injunction cannot rightfully stand upon a bill that does not set forth the facts essential to perfect title. If they are not in the bill, they must appear in an affidavit filed in aid and elaboration of an allegation of title in general terms. Ex parte Lund, 6 Ves. Jr. 782; Whitelegg v. Whitelegg, 1 Bro. Chy. 57. Confirmation of this conclusion is found in observations made in Thomas v. Nantahala, etc., Co., 58 Fed. 485. Deraignment of title was excused there, only because the bill alleged pendency of an action at law to determine the question of title, and, further, because the defendant had waived sufficiency of the bill by answering without having demurred to it. In Fitzpatrick v. Childs, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 365, the court held that, in order to obtain an injunction, the plaintiff should set out his title particularly. In this respect, there can be no difference between an equitable title and a legal one. In either case it is a mere matter of compliance with the rule requiring clearness, certainty, and definiteness of statement of the grounds of an application for the award of an extraordinary writ operative in advance of an adjudication of right between the parties.

The bill does not in any way excuse its failure to deraign title from the state, and it relies upon paper title only. The deeds exhibited do not show complete title. Possession is alleged, but the duration thereof is not given, nor are the elements of title by adverse possession set up. Sufficiency of allegation of such title is not claimed. If allegations of actual possession in the plaintiff and total lack of title in the defendant would suffice, the bill admits that the defendant claims the timber by virtue of a sale made to him by Carter, and thus discloses on its face a conflict of claims respecting title.

[4, 5] Our conclusion is that the bill is not sufficient for the purpose of a preliminary injunction and that the injunction awarded on it was properly dissolved, upon the motion made for dissolution thereof; but that it is sufficient for the purposes of an injunction by way of final decree, if it sufficiently alleges equitable title to the land.

[2] This is denied in argument, on the ground that the deed from the Union Mining Company, exhibited with the bill and purporting to be a muniment of the title averred, contradicts the general allegation of title by an affirmative showing that it was not validly executed by that company. It recites authority given to H. Crawford Black, by the corporation, to acknowledge the deed, as its attorney in fact. He executed it as president, in an informal way, affixed the seal of the corporation, and acknowledged the deed in due form. It also recites a consideration of $2,000 paid, and the amended bill alleges willingness on the part of the corporation now to execute any further conveyances or assurances that may be necessary to pass such title as it has. This amply suffices to establish equitable title by executory contract executed on the part of the plaintiffs, if not by their vendor. From this conclusion, it is apparent that the demurrer to the bill should have been overruled.

For the reasons stated, the decree will be affirmed in so far as it dissolved the injunction, and reversed in all other respects, the demurrer to the amended bill overruled, and the cause remanded.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

SINNETT et al. v. GOFF et al.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 29, 1921.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. Guardian and ward ¶84—Guardian ad litem necessary in summary proceedings to lease land of ward for production of oil and gas.

In a summary proceeding prosecuted by a guardian, as provided in section 12, c. 83, Code (sec. 3972), to lease the land of his wards for the production of oil and gas, the appointment of a guardian ad litem is necessary, and, when so appointed, he, as well as the infants, if over 14 years of age, should answer the petition on oath in proper form.

2. Infants ¶92—Answer of guardian ad litem held sufficient in form.

An answer by "J. M. Harper, guardian ad litem," is sufficient when it is otherwise in the usual form, and commits the interests of the infants to the care and protection of the court and the court files, and throughout the proceeding recognizes and acts upon it as the answer of the infants by the guardian ad litem.

3. Guardian and ward ¶105(1)—Inconsequential irregularities in answer of guardian ad litem held not reversible upon bill of review.

Court orders in such a proceeding, authorizing and confirming a lease of infants' land, made by a guardian pursuant to such orders, are not reversible upon a bill of review by an infant within six months after he attains his majority, where the only basis for the review is an inconsequential irregularity in the caption or signature to the answer of the guardian ad litem.

4. Infants ¶113—That decree is for or against infant does not change its legal effect.

There is no legal difference in effect between a decree in favor of or against an infant and a decree in favor of or against an adult, as neither can impeach or invalidate it except for fraud, collusion, or error in its procurement.

Proceedings by Lula A. Sinnett and others against Lee Goff and others. A demurrer to the bill was sustained, and case certified. Affirmed.

Thos. P. Ryan, of Spencer, for plaintiffs.
S. P. Bell and Grover F. Hedges, both of Spencer, for defendants.

LYNCH, J. J. M. Simmons, by his will duly probated, devised 44 acres of land and other property in Roane county to his widow, Minnie B. Simmons, and his three infant children, Earl, Susan, and Lula Ann, and appointed his widow their guardian. Subsequently, on the 17th day of April, 1912, Minnie B. Simmons conveyed her one-fourth interest in the 44 acres to Lee Goff and A. S. Heck, and in May of the same year, as guardian, filed her petition in the circuit court, seeking by a summary proceeding to lease for oil and gas purposes the three-fourths interest of the children. Notice was given, as required by section 12, c. 83, Barnes' Code 1918 (Code 1913, sec. 3972), and by order of the court J. M. Harper was appointed guardian ad litem for the infants. Answers were filed by them and by the guardian at litem, and on May 23, in pursuance of the court's direction, the guardian executed a lease of the interests of the infants to Goff and Heck, who later assigned the lease to Cabot, also named defendant. The lease was confirmed and ratified by a final order in the cause, with the provision that the proceeds from the infants' interests in the land should be invested for their benefit.

Lula A. Sinnett (née Simmons) having attained her majority within six months prior to the institution of the suit, and H. Brooks Sinnett, her husband, filed their bill praying that the decree in the said summary proceeding be reviewed, reversed, and set aside. They allege as errors in the proceeding certain defects in the answer filed by the guardian ad litem in behalf of the infant children, of whom plaintiff, Lula A. Sinnett, was the youngest. Two answers were filed to the petition, both of which appear in the record. The first purports to be the "joint and several answer" of the three minor children, naming them, and bears their signatures. The other, styled "The answer of J. M. Harper, guardian ad litem of the infant defendants Earl Simmons, Susan Simmons and Lula Ann Simmons," is signed "J. M. Harper, guardian ad litem," and it is the alleged insufficiency of this answer which forms the basis of plaintiffs' complaint. The trial court sustained the demurrer to the bill, which ruling is now certified to this court for review.

[1] Plaintiffs register no objection to the subject-matter of the answer, which is fully responsive to the averments of the bill, but merely to the form of its execution. The gist of their position is that the expression, "J. M. Harper, guardian ad litem," is not the signature of J. M. Harper acting in behalf of the infant children, but is the signature of J. M. Harper individually, and therefore insufficient to satisfy the provisions of section 3, c. 83, Code (Code 1913, sec. 3963), which requires that—

"To every such infant or insane defendant there shall be appointed a guardian ad litem, who as well as the infant (if over fourteen years of age) shall answer the bill on oath in proper person."

This argument plaintiffs support by reference to a number of cases in which the signers of promissory notes and those against whom executions and judgments are directed are bound in their individual rather than representative capacities. Decisions of this character are not controlling in proceedings such as this one is. Investigation of the authorities indicates that the present case should be governed by a rule of agency, thoroughly fundamental and by no means contradicted by the decisions upon which plaintiffs rely. We refer to the doctrine expressed by Dr. Mechem as follows:

"In determining whether a given form of execution is sufficient to bind the principal, the primary consideration is, What is the true intention of the parties as expressed in this contract? In settling this question it must be borne in mind that no particular form of words is required, and that the intention is to be gathered from the whole instrument, and not from any isolated portion of it." Mechem, Agency (2d Ed.) § 1166, cases cited.

Manifestly, the courts have shown no disregard for this principle in ruling that notes and judgments in which no person is disclosed as the object of their operation, save the one specifically named by the signature as the maker or in the caption as party defendant, should not readily be construed as binding upon a principal, concerning whom the subject-matter of the writing sheds no light and affords no information.

[2] The answer considered discloses its office with particularity. In the approved statutory form, Harper addresses the court as the guardian ad litem of the infants named, and avers:

"That he is advised and believes that his said wards have material interest in the matter and things alleged in said petition; that he has no personal knowledge thereof, but upon information and belief he says that such allegations are true; that his said wards are under the age of 21 years and he commits their interests to the care and protection of the court," etc.

From the four corners of this instrument does there appear any reasonable question that Harper, who signed and verified it "J. M. Harper, guardian ad litem," acted otherwise than in his duly authorized representative capacity? We think not, and the authorities support such a conclusion.

"The answer filed by the guardian ad litem of the infant purports to be the answer of the infant by his guardian ad litem, but it is signed by the latter, * * * and a careful reading will show that it is in fact his answer. It is the opinions, statements and responses of the guardian that are given; and however the judge or clerk may have regarded or termed it in the hurry and confusion of the court, it has the same effect as if it were formally designated and filed as the answer of the guardian in his proper person." Durrett v. Davis, Guardian, et al., 24 Grat. (Va.) 302.

"A defendant in equity is charged as executrix and as devisee of a decedent; in the caption of her answer she professes to answer only as executrix; but, in the body of her answer, she in fact answers as devisee. Held, such answer places her before the court in her character of devisee." Kinney's Ex'rs v. Harvey & Worth et al., 2 Leigh (Va.) 70, 21 Am. Dec. 597.

Defendants in their brief cite as "conclusive" Thompson v. Land & Coal Co., 77 W. Va. 782, 88 S. E. 1040. There this court held it to be immaterial whether a guardian ad litem signs the infant's name as "by" himself, as guardian ad litem, or signs his own name first as guardian ad litem "for" the infant. We were concerned in that decision with a more superficial question of agency, the mere form of an agent's signature, and the conclusion does not control the present case. It is, however, representative of a principle applicable here in arriving at a proper result, namely, that—

"Notwithstanding the character of the proceeding, it is remedial, and the statute authorizing it is liberally construed." French v. Pocahontas Coal & Coke Co., 87 W. Va. 226, 104 S. E. 554.

[3,4] In that case the court reviews the character of proceedings for the disposal of infants' property, citing Frantz v. Lester, 82 W. Va. 328, 95 S. E. 945, 2 A. L. R. 1558, in which it was carefully shown that any disposition of such property is the court's disposition, not the act of an individual, though the court does act through its appointed representative. Such being the case, as an appellate tribunal, our inclination is to sustain such sales rather than avoid them for irregularities which do not affect the merits of the action or defeat the ends of justice. See Zirkle v. McCue et al., 26 Grat. (Va.) 517. Indeed, under the authorities we seem bound to this position.

"An infant can impeach a judgment or decree only upon the grounds which would invalidate it in case of another person, such as fraud, collusion, or error. He is, as a rule, as much bound by a decree against him as an adult. The law recognizes no distinction between a decree against an infant and one against an adult." Harrison et al. v. Wallton's Ex'r et al., 95 Va. 721, 80 S. E. 372, 41 L. R. A. 703, 64 Am. St. Rep. 830; Lafferty v. Lafferty, 42 W. Va. 783, 26 S. E. 262; Hare v. Hollomon, 94 N. C. 14; Joyce v. McAvoy, 31 Cal. 273, 89 Am. Dec. 172; Ralston v. Lahee, 8 Iowa, 17, 74 Am. Dec. 291; Sites v. Eldredge, 45 N. J. Eq. 632, 18 Atl. 214, 14 Am. St. Rep. 769.

There is no error in the ruling certified.

SWARTZ et al. v. KAY et al. (No. 4153.)(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 29, 1921.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. Evidence ⚡269(1)—Declarations of customers admissible in action for injury to business.

In an action for conspiracy to injure and destroy another's business, by withdrawing and inducing others to withdraw their patronage, by false and malicious reports concerning him and the conduct of his business, it is competent to give in evidence the declarations of such customers to others as to their reasons for their actions, providing such reasons are shown to have connection with the false and malicious reports promulgated by the accused.

2. Conspiracy ⚡19—Declarations of defendants in action for injury to business held admissible.

And upon the same principle, but with stronger reason, the declarations and representations of defendants themselves, accused of so conspiring, and of such false and malicious reports concerning the business of another, may be given in evidence by witnesses to whom they were made, such evidence not being incompetent as hearsay.

3. Conspiracy ⚡8, 22—Gist of action is injury done; verdicts against those conspirators contributing to injury to plaintiffs' business proper.

In a case of this character the gist of the action is the injury done to plaintiff's business, not the conspiracy, and if those accused, or any of them, are shown to have done the acts complained of, the verdict may be against such of them as may have done or contributed to the injury, the fact of the conspiracy in such cases being simply to aggravate the damages and to render what was done by any of the actors the act of all.

4. Conspiracy ⚡19—Acts and statements of conspirators admissible to show conspiracy.

In cases of alleged conspiracy courts are quite liberal in the admission of evidence and will allow the fact of such conspiracy to be made out by the declared acts and statements of the individual conspirators, and where several persons have similar or identical grounds of complaint against another and by their acts and utterances endeavor to injure or destroy his business, each being aware of the feelings and doings of the others and approving the result, such conduct often affords sufficient evidence to sustain a verdict against them all.

5. Conspiracy ⚡8—Plaintiffs' disloyalty does not justify conspiracy to ruin his business.

The fact that one may be suspected or accused of disloyalty and in sympathy with an alien enemy at war with his country, will not justify or warrant another citizen in combining with others to circulate false reports about the accused's business with the object of destroying it, so as to injure and damage him thereby.

6. Pleading ⚡327—Defective declaration curable by bill of particulars.

If in such an action for conspiracy to destroy or injure another's business, the declaration does not set forth with sufficient certainty the fact or acts done in furtherance of the conspiracy, the defect may be cured by a proper bill of particulars, in accordance with the rule announced in Transportation Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 50 W. Va. 611, 622, 40 S. E. 591, 56 L. R. A. 804, 88 Am. St. Rep. 895, point 5 of the syllabus.

Error to Circuit Court, Jackson County.

Action by L. H. Swartz and others against D. A. Kay and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Lewis H. Miller, of Ripley, Charles E. Hogg, of Point Pleasant, and T. J. Sayre and Warren Miller, both of Ripley, for plaintiffs in error.

J. L. Wolfe, of Ripley, for defendants in error.

MILLER, J. This action was to recover from defendants damages for wrongfully and unlawfully conspiring together to injure and destroy the business and property of plaintiffs, who owned and operated a flour mill in Jackson County, known as the Mt. Alto Mills, which they alleged was worth in production capacity at least $5,000.00 per year, and that the plant itself was worth at least the sum of $15,000.00.

The allegations of conspiracy in the first count are that the defendants, in the months of May and June, 1918, maliciously and wickedly contriving and intending to injure plaintiffs and ruin their business and render their plant and mills worthless, and deprive them thereof, did confederate and conspire together and with each other to prevent all persons producing and raising wheat in said county and in the adjoining county of Mason, where the patronage of said mills had extended, from bringing their wheat to said mills, and from buying flour or meal from said plaintiffs, and from trading or dealing in any manner with them, the defendants or either of them not being owners or operators of any mills, nor in any way engaged in any business in competition with plaintiff; and that the acts of defendants in so counseling and advising and conspiring to prevent the former customers of plaintiffs, who at that time and theretofore had traded with them, and had brought their wheat to them to exchange for flour, and had bought flour from them, from dealing with them, were wanton and malicious, and not done by right of competition or under cover of friendly and neighborly counsel, but in pursuance of said conspiracy and solely for the purpose of injuring plaintiffs in their said business and property.

And after setting out the manner and means of so conspiring, this count further avers that because thereof a very large number of the patrons and persons who had been accustomed to trade with and patronize plaintiffs, quit doing so, specifying a number of such persons and others who had been so induced; and in furtherance of their object it is averred that defendants tried to procure the arrest of plaintiffs by federal authorities, for being German by descent, they were falsely accused of being unfriendly to and not in sympathy with the United States, all of which was untrue and done by defendants in furtherance to injure and destroy plaintiffs' business.

The second count is substantially the same as the first, except that in describing the time of the unlawful and malicious acts and conduct of defendants, it is averred that they were done during the spring and summer of 1918.

On the trial there was a verdict and judgment against defendants for six hundred dollars, of which they complain in this court.

The first error alleged and relied on for reversal is that the court over defendants' objection admitted certain evidence characterized as hearsay, and for that reason incompetent. This characterization is applied to two classes of testimony: First, the declarations of some nine former customers, named in the bill of particulars called for by defendants and given in evidence by plaintiffs and others, as to the reasons assigned by them for withdrawing their custom from plaintiffs' mill, to the effect that plaintiffs were pro-German, disloyal to the United States in the war with Germany, and that they were putting poison in their flour and ground up glass in their meal; and that they were not, as they represented themselves to be, engaged in the manufacture of flour and feed for the United States government: Second, the declarations of sundry witnesses, merchants in the county and former customers of plaintiffs, as to what customers of theirs gave as reasons for refusing to buy from them flour and feed manufactured by plaintiffs at their said mills, to the effect that one or more of the defendants had told them that plaintiffs were pro-Germans and disloyal citizens of the United States and were putting poison and broken up glass in their flour and meal, and other false reports derogatory to their character, and that they ought to be shot, etc.; and that they would not buy liberty bonds or war savings stamps or contribute to the Red Cross society; and that they had tried to wreck a train.

[1] An argument made by counsel for defendants applicable to both these classes of testimony is that they amounted only to hearsay, and that the declarations were not made in the presence of defendants, wherefore they are incompetent. One of the principal facts which the plaintiffs were called upon to establish was that the persons named in their bill of particulars actually ceased to trade with them and with the merchants who bought and sold their products, and the reasons they gave for doing so. If they ceased for causes in no way connected with defendants or their false reports about plaintiffs and their business, of course defendants would in no way be responsible for damages for the loss of their trade and business. Leech v. Farmers' Tobacco Warehouse Co., 171 Ky. 791, syllabus 2, 188 S. W. 886. In cases of this kind the rule seems to be that declarations of customers or workmen quitting trade or employment are competent to prove the facts and motive for their conduct, not the prior fact that defendants were responsible for the false reports put in circulation. The fact of defendants' guilt, if true, may be shown by other competent testimony. Elmer v. Fessenden, 151 Mass. 359, 24 N. E. 208, 5 L. R. A. 724, and cases cited; Starkie on Evidence, § 89, and note. In one of the cases cited in the note, an action for enticing away the servant of the plaintiff, it was held that evidence of the declaration of the servant at the time he left, as to the motive which influenced him was admissible. Hadley v. Carter, 8 N. H. 40. Other cases referred to in the note will be found to illustrate the application of the same principle. In 2 Jones on Evidence, sec. 300 (303), quoting 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, sec. 100. It is said:

"It does not follow because the writing or words in question are those of a third person, not under oath, that therefore they are to be considered as hearsay. On the contrary it happens, in many cases, that the very fact in controversy is whether such things were written or spoken, and not whether they were true; and, in other cases, such language or statements, whether written or spoken, may be the natural or inseparable concomitants of the principal fact in controversy."

In 3 Wigmore on Evidence, sec. 1729 (2), it is said:

"A declaration of a present existing motive or reason for action is admissible,—assuming, of course, that the declarant's motive is relevant. So far as concerns accused persons, this use is later considered (post, § 1732). In other cases, the typical instances in which motive becomes material are actions for loss of service or of custom, in which it is necessary to show that the customer's or servant's abandonment of the plaintiff was motivated by the defendant's persuasion or threats; and actions in which the reliance of a person on another's representations becomes a part of the issue. The use of declarations of this sort is fully recognized in numerous precedents."

See also illustrative cases cited in note. The Supreme Court of the United States, in Lawlor v. Loewe, 235 U. S. 522, 536, 35 Sup. Ct. 170, 59 L. Ed. 341, applied this rule of evidence to the introduction of newspapers for the purpose of showing publicity in places and directions where the facts were likely to bring home notice to the defendants, to prove intent and detrimental consequence of the principal acts complained of; and also to letters from customers of a boycotted manufacturer, as reasons for ceasing to deal with him. In the case of Moores & Co. v. Bricklayers' Union No. 1, 10 Ohio Dec. 665, affirmed Bricklayers' Union No. 1 v. Moores & Co., 51 Ohio St. 605, where a business firm sued a labor union for losses charged to a malicious conspiracy, it was decided that plaintiff might show declarations made by its customers, at the time they withdrew their trade, as to their reasons for its withdrawal. The objections to this class of testimony were general, and not limited; and being good for the purpose indicated, the general objections were properly overruled.

[2] It follows with greater reason, that all the evidence of these witnesses as to declarations by defendants to them directly respecting plaintiffs and the conduct of their business, was also admissible to connect them with the main fact—their responsibility for the false accusations, and consequent loss of customers.

The next question is, whether a conspiracy to impair and destroy plaintiffs' business, and resulting substantially as alleged, is established by the evidence. On the trial the defendants submitted to the jury three interrogatories. Of these, the first and second, and the jury's answers thereto, are as follows:

First. "Did the defendants enter into a conspiracy as to how they could injure plaintiffs by getting the patrons of plaintiffs' mills to cease trading with and doing business with plaintiffs at their mills?" Answer: "Yes." Second. "If defendants did enter into such conspiracy, (a) when, (b) where, and (c) how was such conspiracy formed?" Answer: (a) "Spring of 1918;" (b) "In the vicinity of Mt. Alto, W. Va.;" (c) "By holding secret meetings and circulating false reports concerning the Swartz Brothers, calculated to ruin their business."

In answer to the third interrogatory, the jury answered that plaintiffs lost their custom in the spring and summer of 1918, and this was the fact as alleged in the second count: that the cause was the false reports of defendants, warning the patrons of plaintiffs not to trade with them nor to have anything to do with them; and that these acts so calculated to injure the plaintiffs were committed by D. A. Kay, G. J. Polsley, J. E. Wilson, Ruben Smith, A. A. Shinn and Edwin Calhoun, omitting the names of the defendants S. S. Webster and N. D. Webster, though finding their verdict against all the defendants sued including the Websters. The answers to these interrogatories may not be wholly conclusive of the rights of the plaintiffs, but they were submitted by defendants and the answers not being inconsistent with the general verdict, but sustaining it, are binding upon them as to the facts found, if sufficiently supported by the evidence. That meetings were held at which all the defendants except S. S. Webster were present at some or all of them, and at which the plaintiffs and their business were considered and derogatory speeches made by one or more of defendants, substantially as alleged, is not denied, nor is it controverted that the false accusations were made to various persons, customers and former friends of plaintiffs throughout the community from which plaintiffs drew their trade; that these accusations were repeated to agents of the United States government, and an investigation secured by one of such agents, who after investigating them reported that the accusations were groundless and unwarranted by the facts; that even after this report, some of the defendants continued to repeat the same falsehoods, to the injury and damage of plaintiffs. As to S. S. Webster, the evidence was that, while not shown to have attended meetings, he was active in several instances, in spreading some of the false reports originating with the other conspirators. It is quite clear from the record that both the Websters were engaged in circulating the propaganda of their confederates, to the detriment and injury of plaintiffs, wherefore, no doubt the jury included them properly, we think, in the verdict. As to the accusations of pro-Germanism, disloyalty to the government, and failure to buy liberty bonds and war savings stamps, and to support the Red Cross society, the fact is that plaintiffs were liberal purchasers of bonds and savings stamps, and did support in the same way the Red Cross, more liberally than most, if not all, their accusers; that they were loyal to the government in the operation of their mill and the distribution of their products, while some of the defendants were disposed to induce plaintiffs to violate the law, and then thereby incurred their displeasure. We can not go into the details of the evidence, but it satisfies us that the findings of the jury were more than justified, and that a much larger verdict would have been justified by the evidence.

[3] In a case of this character the gist of the action is the injury done plaintiff, not the conspiracy, and if defendants or any of them be shown to have done the acts complained of, the verdict and judgment may be against such or all of them as are proved to have done or contributed to the injury; if a conspiracy to do the injury is shown, the effect is to aggravate the damages and to make what was done by one or more of the conspirators the act of all, and to warrant a verdict and judgment against all. Porter v. Mack, 50 W. Va. 581, 40 S. E. 459; Ellis v. Dempsey, 4 W. Va. 126; Leech v. Farmers

Tobacco Warehouse Co., supra; Democrat Printing Co., v. Johnson (Okla.) 175 Pac. 737. See, also, cases digested in First Decennial Digest Conspiracy, §§ 13, 14.

[4] Because of the fact that it is often difficult to establish a conspiracy by direct evidence, the courts are quite liberal in the admission of evidence, and will allow the fact of conspiracy to be made out by the declared acts and statements of the individual conspirators; and the fact that several persons have similar or identical grounds of complaint against another, and by their acts and utterances endeavor to injure or destroy the business of another, each being aware of the feelings and doings of the other and approving of the result accomplished, often affords evidence of a confederation or common purpose sufficient to sustain the verdict. Gilman v. People, 178 Ill. 19, 52 N. E. 967; Webb v. Drake, 52 La. Ann. 290, 26 South. 791.

As was held in Leech v. Farmers' Tobacco Warehouse Co., supra, where persons combine to affect injuriously or destroy the business of another person or corporation, and to that end cause to be circulated false and damaging reports concerning such person or his business, and the effect thereof is to accomplish the object intended, they will be individually and jointly liable for the damages sustained. One of the means adopted by defendants to accomplish the manifest purpose to do injury to plaintiffs and their business was to circulate the false reports, for which it is not shown there was the slightest foundation in fact, and to spread abroad in the community such false accusations. These reports, as they were intended, reached the ears of customers, and drove them away from plaintiffs' mills. The reasons such customers gave for withdrawing their trade from plaintiffs and refusing to buy their products from merchants to whom they sold goods, were the reports disseminated in the community by defendants. As already shown, the reasons given by such customers for withdrawing their trade becomes in such cases proper evidence to go to the jury on the fact of injury and damage resulting from the acts of defendants. Elmer v. Fessenden, supra, Cooke v. Weed, 90 Conn. 544, 97 Atl. 769.

The second point of error urged for reversal is the giving to the jury of the eight several instructions propounded by plaintiffs' counsel. We have examined these, and so far as we observe they propound correctly the law applicable to the facts in the case. The main criticism of defendants' counsel is that the first and fourth are amenable to the law against assumption of the facts in controversy, and for not submitting the facts to the jury. The first defines conspiracy and does submit to the jury the question of fact on the evidence. The fourth instruction assumes no fact as proven, but submits to the jury the question of the fact of conspiracy or combination by defendants. And as applying to all the instructions it is complained that the evidence did not justify the giving of any of them to the jury because, as counsel contend, no evidence was offered to justify them. As already indicated, we think they were all warranted by the facts proven.

[5] The third point of error assigned is the denial by the court of instructions numbered 8, 9, 10, 17 and 20 proposed by defendants' counsel, the only ones rejected out of the twenty-five requested. Those given, it seems to us, cover every conceivable phase of the defendants' case, in some instances more liberally than they were entitled to; and for this reason, if for no other, those rejected were properly rejected. The eighth and ninth instructions were predicated on the theory that plaintiffs, between April 6, 1917, and May 26, 1918, and subsequently, made statements or gave expressions reasonably conveying to plaintiffs, or some of them, that they were sympathizers with the German government and were disloyal to the United States, and would have told the jury that if they so believed, the defendants had the right to give publication to such facts without rendering themselves liable to plaintiffs for any injury or damage resulting to them or their business or to their standing in the community. In the first place we find nothing in the evidence warranting the theory of plaintiffs' pro-Germanism or disloyalty. In the second place, their supposed pro-Germanism or disloyalty, if proven, would not have justified the false representations proven, that plaintiffs were engaged in introducing into their flour and meal ground glass and poison. These instructions were binding ones, and would have told the jury to find for defendants the facts assumed therein. Even after defendants were advised by the representative of the United States that their accusations were unfounded, the evidence shows that they did not cease from spreading the false reports.

The tenth instruction was properly rejected because it was predicated on the theory that customers of plaintiffs may have quit dealing with them without any reason and not by reason of anything said or done by defendants, or either of them, and would have told them if they so found, they should find for defendants. True, one has the right to withdraw patronage from another's business without any cause, but he has no right to conspire with others to destroy his business, by circulating false reports concerning the same, and thereby to maliciously and wrongfully injure and damage him. Leech v. Farmers' Tobacco Warehouse Co., supra, syllabus, point 4, and authorities cited, 171 Ky. at page 797, 188 S. W. 886.

Instruction number 17 would have told the jury that the holding of meetings to ascertain who were pro-German and disloyal citizens and reporting their names to federal authorities did not constitute a conspiracy, and that if the jury found defendants, or any of them, had attended any such meeting they were not guilty of any wrong of which plaintiffs could complain. This instruction was properly rejected; first, because it was covered by instruction number 15 given; and, second, because it does not state the whole of plaintiffs' case. While the meeting and reporting the names of disloyal citizens would not constitute conspiracy, yet if, as the evidence shows, defendants at the same time conspired to destroy plaintiffs' business, and following the time of holding the meetings gave out false and scandalous reports as to the conduct of plaintiffs' business, doing the injury and damage, they would be liable therefor. This instruction, furthermore, was liable to mislead the jury as to the real issue in the case.

The twentieth instruction was rightly rejected for the reason, among other things, that it would have told the jury if they found from the evidence that plaintiffs were disloyal to the United States, and German sympathizers, they had the right, and it was their duty, to withdraw their patronage and induce others to do the same. As already stated, there was no evidence justifying the theory of such disloyalty and German sympathy, and besides, it was neither the duty nor the right of defendants by falsehood and deceit to do injury to plaintiffs' business and property.

The fourth, fifth and sixth grounds urged in support of defendants' motion for a new trial are; (a) that S. S. Webster was not present at any of the meetings; and (b) that N. D. Webster, though present at one or two of these meetings, took no part in spreading the propaganda of his confederates. But S. S. Webster was shown to have been closely related to N. D. Webster and some of the other defendants, and to have been unfriendly to plaintiffs, and to have made false representations about the manufacturing of flour and feed by the plaintiffs for the United States, and engaged in spreading the pro-German talk about them, calculated to do injury to them. We think the evidence justified the jury in finding against the Websters as well as the other defendants. As already observed, the conspiracy charged was not the gist of the action, but the injury and damage done plaintiffs by false reports concerning them and their business.

[8] The seventh, and last, ground assigned for reversal, not included in defendants' petition for the writ of error, but urged in the brief of their counsel, is that the declaration was insufficient; (1) because a conspiracy is not per se actionable; and (2) because the facts in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy were not set forth with certainty as required. Citing for this proposition 5 R. C. L. § 41, page 1090, and Porter v. Mack, supra. If there is any merit in this point, it was cured by the bill of particulars called for by defendants and actually filed by plaintiffs. This was good practice and answers the criticism that the cause of action was too generally stated. Transportation Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 50 W. Va. 611, 622, 40 S. E. 591, 53 L. R. A. 804, 88 Am. St. Rep. 895, point 5 of the syllabus.

Finding no substantial error in the rulings of the trial court, we are of opinion to affirm the judgment.

Homicide \Rightarrow 300(9)—Instruction as to justification of assault by deceased upon accused held error as not supported by evidence.

In a prosecution for murder, where the accused relies on self-defense, and the evidence shows that the deceased was committing an aggravated assault upon him with a dangerous and deadly weapon at the time the fatal shot was fired, it is error to instruct the jury that such assault was justified if they believe from the evidence that the deceased had reason to believe, and did believe, that he was in danger of death or great bodily harm at the hands of the accused, when the evidence does not show, or tend to show, an assault, either real or threatened, upon the deceased by the accused.

Error to Circuit Court, Logan County.

Ballard Plymale was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he brings error. Reversed, and new trial granted.

E. L. Hogsett, of Huntington, for plaintiff in error.

E. T. England, Atty. Gen., and R. A. Blessing, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

LIVELY, J. Defendant Plymale was convicted of murder in the second degree in the circuit court of Logan county, and on the 27th day of October, 1919, was sentenced to confinement in the penitentiary for five years; from which judgment he prosecutes this writ of error.

The defendant was postmaster at Christian in the county of Logan, was 62 years of age, and weighed from 135 to 150 pounds. The deceased, Sanford Morgan, owned a small stock of goods at Christian, and there were some business transactions between him and Plymale which necessitated the keeping of mutual accounts. On the 1st day of October, 1919, Morgan went to the post office, where he was asked by Plymale if he was ready to make settlement, and Morgan replied, "I will settle with you and I will pay you all I owe." At that time Gas Blankenship was in the post office with Morgan, but his evidence was not taken upon the trial. As Plymale started to procure his book of accounts so as to compare it with Morgan's book, it appears that Morgan made an assault upon him with his fists and knocked him down and began beating him assisted by Blankenship. Several persons hearing the noise of the affray came on the scene and attempted to take Morgan off of Plymale and separate them, but for a time were prevented from so doing by Blankenship, who was armed with a stick or club and who insisted that no one should interfere until there was a cry of "enough." Finally the men were separated, Plymale having been beaten up considerably, there being wounds on his face and behind his ear which was bleeding, and Morgan was told to go away by a Mr. Blamire, a man who seemed to be in authority in the village or collection of houses at the lumber plant. Before going, however, he procured Plymale's book of accounts and took the same with him to the grade of the railroad about 155 feet from where the post office was located. Plymale, after regaining his feet, seemed to be incensed at Blankenship and drew a knife and chased him away, and one or two of the witnesses said that he took the stick or club, with which Blankenship had kept back the crowd that desired to separate the combatants, and made some futile efforts to strike Blankenship with the stick. Blamire then pacified Plymale and insisted that he should go and wash away the evidence of the affray. In 10 or 15 minutes after Plymale had washed, he discovered that his book of accounts was gone; and presuming it had been carried away by Morgan, who was down on the grade, started in that direction.

Three witnesses, Marion Harless, Bill Toller, and Ott Cook, were present and saw the difficulty between Morgan and Plymale down on the railroad grade where the fatal shooting occurred, and were all examined as state's witnesses. There is very little discrepancy in their testimony, and it is not materially different from the testimony of the defendant. These witnesses testify that they were near Morgan; that he was sitting on the grade, or near the grade, of the railroad, and observed Plymale approaching leisurely and with his right hand in his front trousers pocket. Upon observing his approach Morgan arose and remarked, "There comes that old man Plymale," and then started to move down the railroad grade, and Plymale walked in the same direction, but a little behind Morgan. Plymale, in an ordinary tone of voice, asked for the return of his book, and Morgan replied, "It is not your book." Some further colloquy occurred between the men about the return of the book, Plymale firmly insisting that it was his book and for Morgan to look inside and see. One of the witnesses says that Morgan picked this club up after he had walked down the grade some feet, having in the meantime picked up a rock which he discarded when he found the club. Neither of the other two witnesses saw him pick up the rock, nor did the defendant himself. It is further in evidence by two of the witnesses that when Morgan refused to give up the book, he told Plymale to go on away or he would hurt him "a damn sight worse than he had." It appears that all this while Plymale kept his right hand in his trousers pocket but made no demonstration or any effort whatever which would indicate that he was going to assault Morgan. On the contrary, he told Morgan he was not going to touch him, but that he wanted the return of his book. Then it appears that Morgan circled, or, as some of the witnesses say, "maneuvered," and got back on a higher piece of ground on the grade and about six or ten feet away from Plymale, who was facing him. At this point, the two men having gone back up the grade, Morgan suddenly sprang at Plymale and struck him over the head with this club. He continued striking him with the club, and Plymale was throwing up his left hand to prevent his being hit on the head, and after being struck several times, the witnesses saying from three to six times, with the club, Plymale drew his revolver out of his pocket and fired one shot down into the ground, as he (Plymale) says, to scare Morgan. Morgan then caught Plymale's right hand, in which he had the revolver, and shoved his arm up in the air and continued to hit him with the stick or club, which he (Morgan) had in his right hand. Plymale twisted loose from the hold on his wrist and quickly fired two shots through Morgan's breast which caused him to fall on the ground. A short time thereafter he expired. Plymale then turned around and started back up towards the post office and in the direction of his dwelling, but faintness overcame him before he got there, and he sank down on the ground and was afterwards assisted to his house by a Mr. L. A. Marsh. He was examined a short time afterwards by Dr. Thornsbury, who found two bruises on the left side of his head, one of which, just over his ear, was swollen to the size of a hen's egg; he had a small cut place over his left eye and a bruised place across the left side of his neck, and his left arm was bruised along on the bone between the wrist and the elbow. His neck was swollen some, and a cut on his head was about one-half inch long but not very deep; his left leg was bruised, and also he had a bruise on his hip. He was sitting on the bed when the doctor came in, but got into his chair and had his wounds dressed. It appears that Plymale was rather slimly built and had not been in robust health for several years; while it appears from Dr. Thornsbury's testimony that Morgan was a strong, symmetrically built man and weighed about 180 pounds.

There appears to have been no prior ill feeling between these two men. Plymale testified that he had the revolver in his pocket at the time of the first assault at the post office and that he was in the habit of carrying this revolver because he handled considerable money at the post office and always kept some on hand for the purpose of accommodating workmen in the neighborhood by cashing checks for them. He said that he had no intention of using this revolver when he went out to recover his book and that he had no particular ill feeling towards Morgan, and went out solely for the purpose of securing the return of his property; that not only Morgan's account was therein, but that it contained his accounts with various other persons. Evidence introduced on the part of the defendant was to the effect, and tended strongly to establish the fact, that Plymale was a good citizen and peaceful and quiet in the neighborhood and was never known to be in a difficulty before. On this evidence, and under the instructions of the court, the jury returned a verdict of second degree murder.

Error is predicated on the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial: (1) Because the evidence does not sustain the verdict; (2) because instruction No. 3 given by the state was improper and misleading.

A consideration of the evidence as it appears from this record is very persuasive that it is not sufficient to sustain a verdict of murder in the second degree. However, the jury has the right to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses and to weigh the testimony, and it must be a very clear case before a court will interfere on the ground that the evidence is not sufficient. The jury and the trial court have peculiar advantages over an appellate court in such matters, in that they have the witnesses before them and can observe their appearance and their demeanor while giving their testimony. It may be observed, although the point is not made, that the trial was had soon after the crime, if any, was committed. The fatal shooting occurred on the 1st of October, and on the 27th of the same month the sentence was pronounced. It may be that the fact that there had been a violent killing in the neighborhood at so recent a date before the trial had a material tendency to create a demand that there should be retribution; that some one should suffer for it. The world-wide conception of primitive times which blossomed out in the old Mosaic law that there should be "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," "and he that killeth any man shall surely be put to death," has left its imprint on modern civilization and its influence is yet to be reckoned with. There should be calm and deliberate and well-considered investigation of all such occurrences. There should be deliberate haste. We feel it unnecessary to say whether or not the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict.

However, we are of the opinion that the instruction complained of is improper under the evidence and circumstances of this case. That instruction is as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the prisoner, Ballard Plymale, armed with a deadly weapon, approached the deceased, Sanford Morgan, while he, the said Sanford Morgan, was peaceably standing or sitting on or near some railroad ties or railroad grade, in such a manner as to give the deceased reasonable cause and ground to apprehend a design on the part of the prisoner to do him, the said Sanford Morgan, some great bodily injury, or to kill him, and reasonable cause to believe and apprehend that there was imminent danger of such design being accomplished, and if the jury believe that said Sanford Morgan did then and there have such apprehension and belief, then the deceased had then and there a right to procure a club, or use one he then had upon the prisoner and even to kill the prisoner in order to save his own life or to protect him from great bodily harm at the hands of the prisoner, and if the prisoner under such circumstances kills the deceased, he cannot be acquitted upon the plea of self-defense. But of all the facts and circumstances the jury are to judge from all of the evidence before them."

This instruction is relied upon as having been given and approved in the case of State v. Hatfield, 48 W. Va. 561, 37 S. E. 626. In approving this instruction in the Hatfield Case, the opinion says it was justified under the evidence of that case. While there is no statement or summary of the facts given in the Hatfield decision, it is apparent from reading the whole case that a feud existed between Hatfield and his victim, Ellis; that Hatfield had threatened to kill Ellis at the first opportunity, which threats had been communicated to Ellis, and both were armed with Winchester rifles. Hatfield had gone to take some letters to the post office, carrying his rifle with him; Ellis was on the steps of a railroad car, either alighting from the train or entering it, which the opinion does not state; Hatfield approached him. "That Hatfield provoked a quarrel with Ellis for the sole purpose of killing him, if he could succeed in having him resent his insults, there can be no question," so states the opinion. The opinion continues:

He stood with "his gun pointed down with his hand on the lock and a part of the time at least the gun cocked, and which could be raised in position to shoot quite as quick as a flash of lightning; it was nothing short of a malicious assault on Ellis, yet defendant's counsel contend that it amounted to nothing but words. If Ellis had ever happened in an unguarded moment to put his hand toward his pocket, he would have been killed in a second of time; the gun could scarcely have been in a more threatening position if it had been pointed at his breast."

As will be seen from the other instructions in the Hatfield Case, the evidence was that Hatfield not only sought out Ellis to kill him, but began the quarrel and made a malicious and deadly assault upon his victim by cocking his rifle and presenting it in immediate readiness to carry out his design. Under such evidence and circumstances, the instruction, taken in connection with the other instructions, was proper and could not have misled. It is clear that under such circumstances Ellis would have been justified in believing his life was in imminent danger. His assailant had declared he would kill him on the first opportunity. He approached with threatening words, with a deadly weapon cocked and presented. Here were overt acts, an assault, not abusive, insulting words alone. Had Ellis killed his assailant under such facts and circumstances, he would have been justified in killing in order to save his own life; and Hatfield could not take advantage of his own wrong and escape under the plea of self-defense, unless he had first declined the combat and retreated to the wall, and then the fatal shot must have been fired in order to preserve his own life or protect himself from great bodily harm. Here there are no such circumstances from the case made out by the state's witnesses, or from any witness.

Morgan began the assault at the post office, and, after severely whipping Plymale, went into the office and took away the account book, the property of Plymale, containing evidence of the accounts of Plymale against him, and against various other persons, and when approached peaceably a short time thereafter with a request for the return of the book in an ordinary tone of voice, he refused to return it to its rightful owner. He began the quarreling and threats, and began to make preparation to carry out his threats. There is no evidence whatever that Plymale made any attempt to draw his pistol until after he had been severely beaten with the club; he had committed no overt act tending to indicate an assault, unless the fact that he had his hand in his pocket could be so construed. One of the state's witnesses, Browning, testified that Plymale usually had one or both hands in his pockets, a habit he had. Could the fact that he approached Morgan and asked for the return of his book, and followed him a few steps insisting on the return of his property, be construed as indicative of an assault, or as an overt act evidencing a purpose to kill? He had a revolver, which he says he usually carried about his person, as he carried considerable money and was in the habit of cashing checks at the post office. This revolver he says was in his pocket at the first assault at the post office, and he did not use it until he thought his life was in danger from the blows of the club. There is nothing to contradict this statement, except inferentially, the evidence of one witness that he had seen, before that time on his visits to the post office, a pistol hanging on the wall near the safe in the post office.

The state's instruction No. 3 is not applicable to the facts and is misleading. From it the jury could infer that it was not necessary for Plymale to commit an overt act of violence, or begin the affray if he had his hand in his pocket, or that within 10 or 15 minutes after having been whipped by Morgan and not having recovered from the beating he approached Morgan with a pistol in his pocket in order to request the return of his property. It may have been unwise to do so, discretion might have been the better part of valor and dictated a request at a later and more propitious time; but would such action indicate an intention to renew the affray, and be construed as an overt act of violence, as this instruction might be interpreted to hold as a matter of law?

Moreover, it must be remembered that Morgan was not without fault. He began the assault at the post office, then carried away Plymale's property without any right to do so, and refused its return to the owner when requested in a proper manner, accompanying such refusal by threats of violence. A prompt return of the book would likely have ended the matter, if he apprehended great bodily harm from the approach of Plymale.

We think it was error to give this instruction, and for that reason reverse the judgment, set aside the verdict, and award defendant a new trial.

Reversed.

STATE ex rel. SHOWN v. O'BRIEN, Judge, et al. (No. 4407.)(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 29, 1921.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Bastards \Leftrightarrow 75—Conviction on confession at one term cannot be annulled at a subsequent term.

A circuit court is without authority to annul at one term a judgment of conviction upon confession of the accused in a bastardy proceeding, and for the periodical payments of money to the county court for the maintenance and support of the child for whose paternity he is responsible, entered at another and different term.

2. Attorney and client \Leftrightarrow 182(2) — Attorney has lien on judgment in bastardy.

An attorney, who prosecutes or assists in the prosecution of a bastardy proceeding to final judgment in favor of the mother of the child, upon an agreement with her or her next friend for an interest in the amount of the recovery, has a lien on the judgment for fees for services rendered by him in her behalf.

3. Attorney and client \Leftrightarrow 189 — Fraudulent agreement between parties to judgment in bastardy cannot deprive attorney of fees.

Where a lien for the fees of an attorney who prosecutes or assists in the prosecution of a bastardy proceeding attaches to final judgment of conviction against the putative father of the child, and for the payment of money for its support for a specific term of years, the mother, in person or by her next friend, and the accused cannot, by a fraudulent agreement after judgment, deprive the attorney of fees for the services so rendered by him.

4. Attorney and client \Leftrightarrow 190(4) — Attorney claiming fraudulent release of judgment defeating lien has burden of proof.

The burden of proof to show fraudulent procurement of a release of a judgment in a bastardy proceeding rests upon the attorney.

5. Compromise and settlement \Leftrightarrow 15(1) — Rights of all parties must be regarded and respected.

The rule that the courts favor compromise settlements by parties to prevent vexatious and expensive litigation only applies where the legal and equitable rights and interests of all parties concerned in a judgment are regarded and respected in good faith.

6. Bastards \Leftrightarrow 78—Mother held to have beneficial interest in judgment for support of child.

Although the mother of the illegitimate child, or her next friend if she is a minor, or the county court if the judgment in a bastardy proceeding is payable to such court for the support of the child, may in a sense hold the fund so derived in trust for the benefit of the child, yet she has a beneficial interest in the fund, as she remains liable for its nurture and maintenance within the limit of her ability to bear that burden, aided by the compulsory contribution of the putative father.

Original proceeding in prohibition by the State, on the relation of Stella M. Shown, against W. H. O'Brien, Judge, etc., and others. Writ awarded.

Thos. P. Ryan, of Spencer, for relator.

LYNCH, J. In a complaint duly verified and filed with a justice of Roane County, Stella M. Shown, a minor and unmarried, charged Earl Bowers with being the father of a child born unto her and on May 12, 1919, he appeared in person and by counsel in the circuit court of the county and confessed the truth of the accusation, H. C. Furgeson being present, and representing the county court, and Thomas P. Ryan, an attorney at law, the mother of the child. Acting upon the complaint and confession, the circuit court entered judgment against Bowers for $45, which amount he then paid, and required him to pay monthly thereafter $7.50, and to enter into a bond, which he did, in the penalty of $1,000, with sufficient surety and conditioned upon the prompt compliance with the order.

Some time prior to May 18, 1921, he having in the meantime paid the monthly installments, Bowers notified the child's mother and the county court of his intention to move the circuit court on that day to vacate the judgment and exonerate him from the burden of the payment so required. The grounds alleged for the motion were his inability to pay the amounts because of the impairment of his health, and his improper conviction upon the complaint made against him, notwithstanding the confession. This motion he made May 18, 1921, and counsel for the mother appeared that day, pursuant to the notice served on her and resisted the motion, and the further hearing was continued from time to time, until upon a petition by her next friend, J. A. Shown, a writ issued by this court prohibited further proceeding upon the notice and motion. Nevertheless, the mother and putative father, either in person or by representative, arrived at some arrangement in the nature of a compromise of the judgment, and she moved to dismiss the prohibition proceeding. Ryan thereupon filed his petition alleging fraud in the procurement of the agreement, the purpose of which, he says, was to delay and defraud him in the collection of fees for his services as her legal advisor in the bastardy proceeding, she, according to the petition, having agreed to allow him one-half of the judgment as compensation. The prayer of his petition is that it may be filed in the prohibition proceeding, "that said action may be allowed to proceed to final determination in the name of the said parties for his benefit, and that his said rights and his said (attorney's) lien may be protected and enforced," and for other further and general relief.

To the petition of the mother's next friend the persons prohibited have not appeared, and the petitioner appeared only to move its dismissal, and on that motion no action has so far been taken, and the Ryan petition remains unanswered.

In this jurisdiction there is and can be no question as to the equitable right of an attorney to claim and have his fees secured to him out of a judgment or recovery he has been instrumental in securing for his client in a particular suit, he, to that extent, being regarded as an equitable assignee of the judgment or decree. Benick v. Ludington, 16 W. Va. 378; Bent v. Lipscomb, 45 W. Va. 183, 31 S. E. 907, 72 Am. St. Rep. 815; Hazeltine v. Keenan, 54 W. Va. 600, 46 S. E. 609, 102 Am. St. Rep. 953; Fisher v. Mylius, 62 W. Va. 19, 57 S. E. 276. If the client does not obstruct the prosecution of the action or suit, and a judgment or decree in his favor results, the attorney, generally, may readily protect the lien for his services. But if, by fraud, collusion, or deception, the client attempts to defeat the lien before judgment or decree, the attorney may and should, as a matter of right, for his own protection, continue for his benefit the prosecution of the action in the name of the client whom he represents. Burkhart v. Scott, 69 W. Va. 694, 72 S. E. 784. There may be and are instances warranting an independent judicial proceeding for the protection and enforcement of such a lien, as in Bent v. Lipscomb, cited.

There are authorities that criticize as inaccurate the use of the term "lien" in a case of this kind. They prefer rather to treat what is thus described as the claim of an attorney to the equitable interference of the court, having jurisdiction of the parties and the judgment, to hold and control it as a security for his protection, because of his official relation to the court. This is the definition given by Baron Parke in Barker v. St. Quentin, 12 M. & W. 441, 152 Reprints, 1270. That term, however, is the one ordinarily used in most decisions.

[3-5] In this case as already remarked, Ryan in his petition alleges a collusive and fraudulent settlement of the judgment he was one of the active agents in procuring, the design and effect of the settlement being, he says, to defeat the collection of his fees, payment of which is secured by a lien on the judgment sought to be annulled, after the adjournment of the term at which it was rendered. Courts favor and encourage settlements between parties to a controversy to avoid the vexation and expense of litigation, but look with disfavor, as in other cases, upon a settlement procured by fraud or imposition, and particularly when designed to delay, hinder, or defeat enforcement of the rights of others vitally interested in the subject-matter of the controversy. The rule favoring compromise settlements does not apply in furtherance of a fraudulent design, but only where the rights and interests of the parties immediately concerned, whether legal or equitable, have in good faith been observed and respected. Weeks v. Wayne County Circuit Judges, 73 Mich. 256, 41 N. W. 269. The case cited is only one of many which sanction both rules, judicial encouragement when the compromise is just and fair, and condemnation when it injuriously affects the rights and interests of others not parties to the compromise agreement, and whose rights are not regarded or respected in the settlement. So numerous and universal are the decisions declaring these just and equitable principles that it is necessary to cite but few of them. For others see Desaman v. Butler Brothers, 118 Minn. 198, 136 N. W. 747, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 642, listing, among others, besides England and Canada, one each from Arkansas, Connecticut, Georgia, Idaho, New Hampshire, South Carolina, and Wisconsin, and many from other state courts. In Peterson v. Struby, 25 Ind. App. 19, 56 N. E. 733, 57 N. E. 599, the court said:

"The law which recognizes an attorney's right to a lien upon a judgment, to secure his fees for services rendered in its procurement, rests upon the equitable rule that the party who has reaped the benefit of his services should not be allowed to run away with the fruits of such services without satisfying the legal demands of his attorney, by whose industry, sagacity, and learning, and in many cases at whose expense, those fruits are obtained."

Rooney v. Second Avenue R. Co., 18 N. Y. 368, says:

"The judgment being under the control of the court, and the parties within its jurisdiction, it will see that no injustice is done to its own officers."

It matters not that in some jurisdictions there are statutes regulating liens for attorneys' fees. The rule is the same in this state where there is no such statute upon the subject except the general provision found in section 13, chapter 119, Code (sec. 4711), authorizing contracts between attorney and client for fees, and in the absence of such contract the right of the attorney to have the reasonable value of his services; and, although some authorities question the existence of a common-law rule upon the subject of such liens, they have been allowed and enforced as if authorized in England from a remote date. The suit or action must, however, proceed to decree or judgment in favor of the client before the lien for the attorney attaches. Until that stage is reached the lien is inchoate, and may not attach or become complete. Whether in that event the parties may compromise without incurring a liability for the fees of an attorney we do not pretend to decide, except in so far as held in Burkhart v. Scott, cited, where the case had proceeded to a verdict but not to a judgment when the compromise agreement was made.

[2, 6] Another question arises, Can there be a lien for attorneys' fees upon a judgment in a bastardy proceeding? The authorities answering that question are few. Counsel cite none, and but two were found in this investigation, Costigan v. Stewart, 76 Kan. 352, 91 Pac. 83, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 630, and note; Taylor v. Stull, 79 Neb. 295, 297, 112 N. W. 577. The decision in the Taylor-Stull Case, however, depended upon the proper construction of a general statute providing for liens of attorneys upon giving notice of the lien to the parties interested in the result of the litigation. Each of the two cases deal with liens in bastardy proceedings, and they concur in sustaining the liens as in other litigated controversies. The contention in both was that the mother was not the owner of the judgment or of any interest in the fund it represented if paid into the treasury of the court, but was a mere trustee, the child being the beneficiary. This argument was countered in this way in Taylor v. Stull: It is doubtless true that in a measure she acts in a trust capacity, and a judgment awarded in such a case is largely for the benefit and for the support of the bastard child, but the mother in such proceeding has a beneficial interest in the judgment. She is liable for the support of the child, and to the extent that she recovers from the father her burdens are lessened etc. The money represented by the judgment here involved, however, was to be paid, and until the date of the compromise agreement was paid, to the county court for repayment to the mother for the support and maintenance of the child and that court is not here asserting an interest in the fund or the right to receive and disburse any balance within its control or any amount due and unpaid on the judgment. But if otherwise the county court would have no right or interest not possessed by the mother. She would still be liable for the maintenance of the child if able to bear that burden. There does not appear to be a substantial or meritorious difference in law or principle between this and the other two decisions.

[1] By what authority not applicable to judgments obtained in any other form of action or judicial proceeding may a circuit court, on motion of either party, alter or annul a judgment obtained in a bastardy proceeding after the end of the term at which the judgment was rendered, as in this case? Although a court may at any time during the term set aside a judgment rendered within the term, there is no authority for doing so after the expiration of the term, except upon motion as provided by section 5, c. 134, Code (sec. 4979), or by bill of review for fraud or for correction of clerical errors in some circumstances (Manlon v. Fahy, 11 W. Va. 482; Morris v. Peyton, 29 W. Va. 201, 11 S. E. 954), or by an independent bill charging fraud in the judgment or decree. It is evident, therefore, that the motion to dismiss the proceeding in bastardy for the annulment of the judgment or for the discharge of the rule in prohibition is not allowable upon the theory on which the motions are predicated. It is fair to say, however, though already remarked, that the circuit court has not ruled upon either of the first two motions, and cannot rule on the third, as it is not addressed to him.

As it is not within the province of this court to hear and determine in the first instance matters arising upon the petition of Thomas P. Ryan, our order will make the rule in prohibition absolute, leaving open for trial in the circuit court such issues upon the question of fraud in the Ryan petition as may seem appropriate in view of the principles of law herein set forth.

FARR v. BABCOCK LUMBER & LAND CO.
(No. 594.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 21, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error \S 80(6)—Order overruling motion for nonsuit as to some of the causes of action not appealable as a final order.

An order sustaining a motion for nonsuit as to one cause of action and overruling it as to other causes of action held not appealable by defendant, not being a final order or an order of such character as to deprive defendant of any substantial right, the defendant having a right to preserve its exception until final judgment.

2. Master and servant \S 369—Compensation Act of Tennessee held not to preclude servant employed in Tennessee from suing in North Carolina.

The Workmen's Compensation Act of Tennessee does not preclude an employee who was employed in Tennessee, but who was injured while working in North Carolina, from bringing action in county in which he was injured for injuries, on the grounds that employer failed to keep a physician at the camp to attend employee after he was injured, that employer employed an incompetent physician, and that employer was negligent in failing to provide employee transportation to his home.

Exceptions and Appeal from Superior Court, Graham County; Harding, Judge.

Action by Ernest Farr against the Babcock Lumber & Land Company. Order overruling motion for nonsuit as to some of the causes of action and defendant excepts and appeals. Appeal dismissed.

The plaintiff is a resident of Graham county, and the defendant is a foreign corporation engaged in the manufacture of lumber, with plants in Tennessee. The defendant owned timber lands in Graham county, and operated a railroad for hauling logs from Graham to its plants. The defendant had camps, a hospital, and an office in Graham county. The plaintiff, an employee of the defendant, was injured while in the prosecution of the work assigned him. The complaint states four causes of action: (1) Defendant's failure to provide for plaintiff a safe place in which to work; (2) defendant's failure to keep a physician at the camp to attend plaintiff after he was injured; (3) defendant's employment of an incompetent physician; (4) defendant's negligent failure to provide plaintiff transportation to his home from the junction on the road of defendant and Knoxville Power Company. Plaintiff alleged that defendant had undertaken to provide for the plaintiff and other employees a competent physician and surgeon when needed, and made a monthly charge or assessment which was deducted from the employees' wages.

The defendant denied the plaintiff's material allegations and alleged that the contract of employment was made in Tennessee and subject to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act (Laws 1919, c. 123) passed by the General Assembly of Tennessee on April 15, 1919, and made effective from July 1, 1919.

The defendant contended that, upon the face of the pleadings—it having been agreed that the contract of employment had been made in Tennessee—the court had no jurisdiction. The court sustained the motion, as to the first cause of action, and overruled it as to the second, third, and fourth. Upon the intimation of the court the plaintiff submitted to a nonsuit as to the first cause, and did not appeal. The court further adjudged that the trial should proceed upon the second, third, and fourth causes. The defendant excepted and appealed.

Merrimon, Adams & Johnston, of Asheville, for appellant.

R. L. Phillips and T. M. Jenkins, both of Robbinsville, for appellee.

ADAMS, J. [1] His honor held that the court had no jurisdiction of the first cause of action, and retained the second, third, and fourth causes for trial by jury. The defendant thereupon excepted and appealed. The order appealed from was not final or of such character as to deprive the defendant of any substantial right, and for this reason the appeal was premature. The defendant can preserve its exception until a final judgment is rendered. In numerous cases this court has held that a premature or fragmentary appeal will not be considered. Hailey v. Gray, 93 N. C. 196; Lane v. Richardson, 101 N. C. 182, 7 S. E. 710; Piedmont Co. v. Buxton, 105 N. C. 74, 11 S. E. 264; Emry v. Parker, 111 N. C. 261, 16 S. E. 236; Ry. v. King, 125 N. C. 454, 34 S. E. 541.

[2] We are requested, however, to review so much of the judgment as retains for trial the second, third, and fourth causes of action. As now advised, especially in the absence of an opposing interpretation by the Supreme Court of Tennessee, we are of opinion that the sections of the Workmen's Compensation Act cited and relied on by the defendant do not purport to interfere with the jurisdiction of the superior court of Graham as to the second, third, and fourth causes of action stated in the complaint, and that there was no error in his honor's order that these causes be retained for trial.

Appeal dismissed.

WALKER, J., concurs only in dismissal of appeal.

(182 N. C. 632)

FOSTER v. WILLIAMS et al. (No. 510.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 14, 1921.)

1. Acknowledgment §6(3)—Wife's deed to husband void for lack of proper examination and certificate.

Under C. S. § 997, relative to acknowledgment of conveyances, etc., by a married woman and section 2515, providing that to render a contract between husband and wife valid it shall appear, on the examination of the wife separate and apart from the husband, to the satisfaction of the officer that the wife freely executed the contract, and that it is not unreasonable or injurious to her a conveyance by a married woman to her husband was void for lack of the examination and certificate required by section 2515, though she was a free trader; and on her death the land descended to her heirs subject to the husband's estate by the curtesy.

2. Acknowledgment §47—Validating statute held inapplicable to deed from wife to husband.

C. S. § 3351, validating deeds by married women who were at the time free traders, though executed without privy examination and without written assent of the husband, applies only to deeds to third persons, and not to a deed to the husband executed without the examination and certificate required by section 2515.

3. Infants §31(1)—Entitled to disaffirm deed and sue for partition within 3 years after maturity.

One who was only 19 years old when she joined with her father in conveying land in which she had an interest as the heir of her mother was entitled, in a suit for partition within 3 years after becoming of age, to assert her interest and ownership.

4. Infants §31(1)—Right to avoid deed and have division of land not affected by rights of purchaser without notice.

The right of an infant to avoid her deed to land in which she had an undivided interest within 3 years after becoming of age and to have a division of the property as of right by sale or actual partition was not affected by reason of the adverse interest of one purchasing without notice, and a decree denying a sale or partition and giving her only a lien for the market value of her interest was erroneous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wilkes County; Shaw, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Annie McGlammery Foster against E. V. Williams and another. From a judgment for plaintiff for insufficient relief, all parties appeal. Reversed on plaintiff's appeal, and affirmed on defendants' appeal.

From the facts and admissions properly presented, it appears: That on the 9th day of December, 1907, Mrs. Nancy C. McGlammery, then wife of L. M. McGlammery, owner of the land in controversy, and who had been properly constituted a free trader, pursuant to the statute undertook to convey said land, by written deed to her husband. Said deed was in due form to convey real estate, containing the usual covenants, and with acknowledgment and privy examination taken in ordinary form, but without certificate, as required by C. S. § 2515 (Revisal, § 2107), to the effect that the conveyance was not "unreasonable or injurious to her." That on December, 27, 1907, said Nancy C. McGlammery died leaving five children of the marriage, her heirs at law, and subsequently one of the children, Vernon McGlammery, died without issue. That on the 10th day of February, 1915, L. M. McGlammery and his second wife, Hettie, and the four surviving children, including Annie Lizzie McGlammery, since intermarried with — Foster, conveyed the land by deed, with full covenants to defendant E. V. Williams for the purchase price of $8,000, the consideration being paid to the father, L. M. McGlammery except $1,000 evidenced by note to L. M. McGlammery, and as to payment of said note there is now a dispute pending between the administrator of L. M. McGlammery and E. V. Williams. That on the 31st day of August, 1918, said E. V. Williams, by written deed with full covenant conveyed the property in dispute to defendant Branson Benton for $10,000, of which $3,000 was paid and the balance secured by deed of trust on the property in favor of the vendor, E. V. Williams, and that at the time of the purchase of said land by said Benton and the payment of the $3,000 thereon the taking of the deed referred to vendee Benton was without notice or knowledge of any infirmity in the title by reason of the claims of plaintiff. On the hearing it was further admitted that plaintiff, Annie Lizzie McGlammery, now Foster, at the time of signing the deed to E. V. Williams, was living on the lands in the house with her father, L. M. McGlammery; that the delivery of the deed was by said L. M. McGlammery, and the settlement was made with him, and that no part of the purchase money was paid to her; that the day after the execution of the deed to Mr. Williams said Annie L. McGlammery, then aged 19, was married to her present husband, — Foster, and since that time has resided in West Virginia. It further appeared that plaintiff, said Annie McGlammery, within 3 years after arriving at the age of 21, instituted the present suit, seeking a partition of the property in accord with her interest in the tract presented to-wit, one-fourth of all the lands contained in the deed of her mother, Nancy C. McGlammery, except 95 acres, in which said mother owned only an undivided half interest and as to the plaintiff a one-eighth interest; and it is admitted by the parties that if plaintiff has any interest in the land it is one-fourth of all the lands embraced in the deed from her mother, except the 95-acre tract, and in this plaintiff has a one-eighth interest. Upon these facts the court declared his conclusions of law as follows:

"That Annie Lizzie McGlammerly Foster is the owner of a one-fourth interest in and to all the lands described in the complaint, and the defendant Branson Benton is the owner of the other three-fourths, except Annie McGlammerly Foster owns only a one-eighth interest in 95 acres of said land, which boundary is described as the fourth tract in the deed from Nancy C. McGlammerly to L. M. McGlammerly and referred to as the Jesse McGlammerly home place and the said Branson Benton is the owner of the other seven-eighths interest therein. E. V. Williams having conveyed said land to Branson Benton before the commencement of this action, and the said Branson Benton having purchased said land without notice that Annie McGlammerly Foster was under age at the time she executed the deed to E. V. Williams, and, having paid $3,000 and still owes $7,000 of the purchase price, the court is of the opinion, and so holds, that the said lands cannot be actually partitioned by reason of the conveyance as aforesaid to Branson Benton. The defendant having agreed that Branson Benton is still due E. V. Williams $7,000 on the original purchase price of said land, the court is of the opinion, and so holds, that the plaintiff is entitled to recover of the defendants the present market value of her undivided interest in and to the lands described in the complaint, together with her pro rata part of the annual rental value of said land from August 26, 1917, to May 30, 1921, with interest on said annual sum, less her pro rata part of the annual taxes on said land during said period, and that said sum should be paid to her out of the remainder of the purchase price due by Branson Benton to E. V. Williams. That the defendants are not liable for rents on the said lands up to August 26, 1917, the date of the death of L. M. McGlammerly, for that the said L. M. McGlammerly was entitled to the possession of his wife's land during his life as tenant by the courtesy. The defendant Branson Benton having purchased the lands as described in the complaint for the price of $10,000, and having paid $3,000 of the purchase price before notice that plaintiff was a minor at the execution of the deed to E. V. Williams, the court is of the opinion, and so holds, that the defendant Branson Benton was to that extent an innocent purchaser for value and without notice of the plaintiff's right, and that the land cannot therefore be actually partitioned. As to the remaining $7,000 of the purchase price, the defendant Branson Benton is not an innocent purchaser for value and without notice of the plaintiff's rights" —and thereupon adjudged that the plaintiff was the owner of the one-fourth and one-eighth interests, respectively; that she was not entitled to actual partition by reason of the fact that defendant Branson Benton had bought the land and paid $3,000 thereon before action commenced and before notice that plaintiff was a minor at the time of the execution of the deed; that plaintiff be awarded the present market value of her interest, together with her proportion of the rents from the time of her father's death, less a proper deduction for taxes, etc.; that the amount awarded her be declared a lien on the balance due for purchase-money, etc.

Hayes & Jones, of Wilkesboro, for plaintiff.

R. N. Hackett and Chas. G. Gilreath, both of Wilkesboro, for defendant Williams.

F. B. Hendren, of Wilkesboro, for defendant Benton.

HOKE, J. [1-3] Our decisions have very insistently and uniformly held that, in order to a valid conveyance of a married woman's real estate, there must be the written assent of her husband and her privy examination had pursuant to the law appertaining to the question. 1 C. S. § 997; Stallings v. Walker, 176 N. C. 321, 97 S. E. 25; Warren v. Dall, 170 N. C. 406, 87 S. E. 126; Smith v. Bruton, 137 N. C. 79, 49 S. E. 64; Scott v. Battle, 85 N. C. 185, 39 Am. Rep. 694. And when the conveyance is from the wife directly to the husband it is essential that, in addition to her private examination in ordinary form, that there shall appear the certificate of the officer taking the probate that the conveyance is not unreasonable or injurious to her, as required by C. S. § 2515. Butler v. Butler, 169 N. C. 584, 86 S. E. 507, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 638; Wallin v. Rice, 170 N. C. 417, 87 S. E. 239; Kearney v. Vann, 154 N. C. 311, 70 S. E. 747, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1189. And in the interpretation of the regulations appertaining to the subject, it is further held that the requirements of the law are in no wise affected by the fact that the wife is, at the time of the conveyance, a properly constituted free trader. Council v. Pridgen, 153 N. C. 443, 69 S. E. 404. It is urged for the defendant that, while these and other like decisions may express the rule ordinarily applicable, the same should not prevail in the present case by reason of a statute appearing in C. S. § 3351, purporting to cure defective executions of deeds of married women free traders at the time and prior to 24th of September, 1913. Our decisions on the subject being to the effect that an attempted conveyance by female covert without the private examination and certificate as required are absolutely void, there is doubt if same could be rendered valid by statutes subsequently passed, but, if it be conceded that the defect comes only from a lack of proper probate, and same is subject to curative legislation as against heirs at law, etc.; the grantor and others holding only as trustees. Under the principle applied and approved in the recent case of Sluder v. Lumber Co., 181 N. C. 69, 106 S. E. 215, the question is not presented on the present record, as, in our opinion, the statute referred to affects, and is only intended to affect, the deeds of married women to third persons, and not those she has attempted to make directly to her husband. The statute provides that deeds by a married woman, free trader, from September 24, 1913, "taken without privy examination and without written assent of the husband," shall be valid and effectual to convey her land, thus showing clearly that only deeds of third persons were contemplated and provided for. This being the law appertaining to the question, the alleged deed of Mrs. McGlammery to her husband is void for a lack of proper examination and certificate, and on her death the land descends to her children and heirs at law subject to an estate by the curtesy in her husband. And he having died, and it appearing from the admitted facts that the present plaintiff was only 19 years of age at the time of the conveyance of the husband and children to defendant Williams, and the present action having been instituted within 3 years from her arrival at maturity, we are of opinion that on the facts presented the plaintiff is entitled to maintain the action in the assertion of her interest and ownership in all of the lands in possession and control of defendants contained in the alleged deed from Mrs. McGlammery to her husband, to wit, one-fourth thereof, except the 95-acre tract, in which she is entitled to one-eighth undivided interest. Hogan v. Utter, 175 N. C. 332, 95 S. E. 565; Chandler v. Jones, 172 N. C. 574, 90 S. E. 580; Baggett v. Jackson, 160 N. C. p. 31, 76 S. E. 86; Gaskins v. Allen, 137 N. C. 430, 49 S. E. 919; Weeks v. Wilkins, 134 N. C. p. 522, 47 S. E. 24.

[4] The question sometimes presented as to whether, in actions of this kind, based on avoidance of his deed, an infant is required to restore the consideration, is not raised in this record, as it appears by admission of the parties that no part of the consideration was paid to the present claimant, but all of it was received by the father except $1,000, and that was evidence by note to him. And the authorities are to the effect also that the right of an infant to avoid his deed within 3 years after his becoming of age is not affected by reason of the adverse interest of one purchasing without notice, but the claimant is entitled to the land, or his interest in it that the facts may disclose. Jackson v. Beard, 162 N. C. 105-110, 78 S. E. 6; Searcy v. Hunter, 81 Tex. 644, 17 S. W. 372, 26 Am. St. Rep. 837; Richardson v. Pate, 93 Ind. 423, 47 Am. Rep. 374; Sims v. Smith, 86 Ind. 577; 22 Cyc. 551. Plaintiff, then, being a tenant in common to the extent of her established interest, is entitled to a division of the property as of right, either by sale or actual partition as the facts may appear, and the portion of the decree by which this right has been denied her will be reversed. Holmes v. Holmes, 55 N. C. 334; Purvis v. Wilson, 50 N. C. 22, 69 Am. Dec. 773. Freeman on Cotenancy, 424. This will be certified, that the cause may be proceeded with in accordance with this opinion.

Plaintiff's appeal reversed. Defendants' appeal affirmed.

PICKENS & BRADLEY v. WHITTON et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 14, 1921.)

1. Justices of the peace ⇨202(1)—Petition for recordari held barred by laches.

To enable an appellant from a justice court, who has not docketed his appeal as required by C. S. § 1532, at the first term of the superior court beginning not less than 10 days after the appeal, to bring up the appeal by recordari, he must move at the earliest possible moment, and where judgment was rendered June 4, and the next term began two days thereafter, the next on July 11, and the next August 1, a petition for recordari on August 13, was barred by laches.

2. Justices of the peace ⇨202(2)—Petition for recordari, alleging meritorious defense in general terms, insufficient.

A petition for recordari to bring up defendant's appeal held not to show a meritorious defense, alleging such defense in general terms, but not setting forth sufficient facts to show it.

3. Justices of the peace ⇨194(2)—Appellee, not moving for affirmance for delay, not barred from objecting to recordari.

An appellee, not availing himself of C. S. § 660, permitting him to docket an appeal from justice court not docketed in time by appellant and move for affirmance, did not waive right to object to appellant's petition to bring up the appeal by recordari.

4. Justices of the peace ⇨197(1)—Right to recordari held not to apply in case of laches.

C. S. § 660, providing that the writ of recordari may issue in cases heretofore allowed by law intends those cases where the party has lost his right to appeal otherwise than by his own default.

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; Adams, Judge.

Action by Pickens & Bradley against G. V. Whitton and C. M. Herring, before a justice of the peace, and from a judgment for plaintiffs rendered June 4, 1921, they appealed to the superior court, but, not having docketed the appeal in time, defendant C. M. Herring on August 13, 1921, applied to the superior court for writ of recordari, and on refusal of the petition he appeals. Affirmed.

The petition for the writ of recordari and the findings of the court follow:

Your petitioner, C. M. Herring, one of the defendants above named, respectfully sheweth the court: That ——— Pickens and ——— Bradley, trading under the firm name of Pickens & Bradley, obtained a judgment against the defendants, before B. L. Lyda, a justice of the peace of said county, on the 4th day of June, 1921, for the sum of two hundred ($200.00) dollars and costs.

Your petitioner further sheweth that the cause of action was as follows: The plaintiffs introduced into court a promissory note, or paper writing, which the defendant, C. M. Herring, your petitioner, had never seen until last above-mentioned date, which note was dated March 15, 1920, due May 15, 1920, in the sum of $200, payable to Pickens & Bradley, and signed "Whitton & Herron, by G. V. Whitton." That incorporated in the note, on its face, was the following: "This note is given for part payment of one 10 H.P. portable International engine. I agree that the title thereto, and to all repairs and extra parts furnished, shall remain in said company, its successors and assigns, until this and all other notes given for the purchase price shall have been paid in money. If I fail to pay this note when due, or if said property is misused or seized for my debts, the holder of this note may seize and sell the same at public or private sale, with or without notice, pay all expenses thereby incurred, and apply the net proceeds upon this note and other notes given for the purchase price thereof, whether due or not due, and retain all payments before made as rent for the use of said property. I expressly agree to pay any balance on this note remaining unpaid after such property is sold, or if the same be burned, or otherwise damaged, or destroyed after its delivery to me."

That this defendant, your petitioner, spells his name H-e-r-r-i-n-g and not H-e-r-r-o-n; that at the alleged time of the making of this note, to wit, March 15, 1920, there was no partnership between your petitioner and G. V. Whitton, nor was there a partnership between your petitioner and G. V. Whitton at any time prior to March 15, 1920; that if the name H-e-r-r-o-n was intended for your petitioner, it was not only wrongly spelled, but was placed on the note entirely without any authority or direction, or knowledge of your petitioner; that at the date of the rendition of judgment before the said magistrate, the engine, so far as your petitioner is advised and verily believes, had never been seized by the plaintiffs, nor sold by them, as expressly provided in the note as a condition precedent to any personal liability attaching to the maker of said note, but this petitioner expressly denies that he was a maker of this note, and his liability thereon in any event.

That your petitioner, on the trial before the aforesaid magistrate, denied all liability on the note, and still denies all liability thereon, and any knowledge of the existence of the note prior to a short time before the trial and rendition of judgment on June 4, 1921, as aforesaid.

That your petitioner is informed and verily believes that he has a good and meritorious defense, and that the plaintiffs' claim against him is not a just and meritorious claim, and if judgment is allowed to stand against this defendant, it will work a grave miscarriage of justice.

That this petitioner lives nine miles out of the city of Asheville; that shortly after the rendition of judgment he duly executed his bond in the sum of $300, the amount fixed by the plaintiffs, to stay execution, which bond was signed by himself as principal and R. E. Carmichael as surety, and filed within the time prescribed by law, with the aforesaid magistrate, and that the sum of 90 cents was paid the said magistrate by him, through his attorney, within the time prescribed by statute, covering both the magistrate's fee and the costs for docketing the return of appeal in the superior court, with a request that the magistrate duly docket the summons, proceedings in the case, and return on the appeal, with the clerk of the superior court, within the time prescribed by statute, which the said justice agreed to do. That the attorney and counsel for your petitioner was out of the county during a portion of the time following the rendition of judgment, and that your petitioner, being in business in Weaverville, nine miles out of the city, as aforesaid, comes into Asheville only at long intervals of time. That the proceedings in the above-entitled cause have not been filed with the clerk of the superior court, nor placed upon civil issue docket for trial; that your petitioner feels that it was not in any way through his neglect or negligence, but through the negligence, oversight, and neglect of the magistrate, that this case was not duly filed.

Wherefore, your petitioner prays that he be granted a writ of recordari, to be directed to the sheriff of the said county, commanding him to go, in proper person, to B. L. Lyda, the aforesaid magistrate, and have recorded and filed with the clerk of the superior court, the summons, judgment, return of appeal, and all other proceedings in the above entitled action, and have said case placed upon the civil issue docket for trial.

Considering the petition of the defendant C. M. Herring duly verified, the affidavits of Mr. Campbell, attorney for said Herring, and B. F. Lyda, justice of the peace, the court finds the following facts:

(1) That the note upon which the plaintiff's cause of action is based is signed by Whitton & Herron by G. V. Whitton; that the summons was served on the defendant G. V. Whitton and the defendant C. M. Herring; that the defendant G. V. Whitton appeared in person before the said justice of the peace, and C. M. Herring appeared in person and by counsel, and made a general denial of plaintiff's cause of action, which was entered upon the record of the justice.

(2) That the said justice of the peace rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendants on the 4th day of June, 1921.

(3) That the defendant C. M. Herring gave notice of appeal to the superior court in open court.

(4) That the justice of the peace was paid his fees for sending up the appeal and fee for docketing in the superior court; that thereafter the defendant C. M. Herring executed an undertaking to stay execution pending said appeal.

(5) That the term of the superior court of Buncombe county first convening after the trial before the justice of the peace began at the courthouse in Buncombe county on the 6th day of June, 1921; that the second term of the superior court of Buncombe county convened July 11, 1921, and that the third term of the superior court of Buncombe county convened on August 1, 1921; that the term convening June 6, was for the trial of civil actions, the term convening July 11, for criminal and civil actions, and the term convening August 1, for civil actions.

(6) That the petition for the recordari in this case was filed in the superior court of Buncombe county on the 13th day of August, 1921, during the third term which convened next after the trial before the said justice, and not at the first term which began more than 10 days after the trial before the justice of the peace.

Upon the foregoing finding of facts, the court is of opinion that the appellant, C. M. Herring, is not entitled to a writ of recordari, as prayed in his petition, and the same is therefore denied.

Ruffner Campbell, of Asheville, for appellant.

W. P. Brown, of Asheville, for appellees.

PER CURIAM: [1] The justice of the peace rendered judgment against the defendants June 4, 1921. The next term of the superior court began within two days thereafter, and it was not incumbent upon the appellants to docket the appeal at that term, it being within less than 10 days, though they could have done so if they had chosen. But the appeal was required to be docketed at the next term of the superior court which began on July 11, being for the trial of both civil and criminal causes. Barnes v. Saleeby, 177 N. C. 258, 98 S. E. 708; Abell v. Power Co., 159 N. C. 348, 74 S. E. 881; Peltz v. Balley, 157 N. C. 166, 72 S. E. 978; Blair v. Coakley, 136 N. C. 405, 48 S. E. 804, and other cases cited under C. S. § 1532. The next term thereafter began on August 1, 1921, and was for the trial of civil actions only. The appellants took no action until towards the close of this term, when on August 13, they applied for recordari, which was refused.

To enable an appellant who has not docketed his appeal within the time required by the statute (C. S. § 1532), i. e., at the first term of the superior court beginning not less than 10 days after the appeal was taken, to bring up his appeal by recordari, he must show both (1) a lack of laches on his part; (2) a meritorious defense. An inspection of the court's findings of fact in this case shows that the defendant has not brought himself within the rule in either particular.

1. The petitioner must move for the writ of recordari at the earliest moment, and his failure to do so will defeat his right thereto. Boing v. Railroad, 88 N. C. 62; Hahn v. Guilford, 87 N. C. 172.

[2] 2. The petitioner has not shown a meritorious defense. Tedder v. Deaton, 167 N. C. 479, 83 S. E. 616; Hunter v. Railroad, 161 N. C. 503, 77 S. E. 678; Marler v. Clothing Co., 150 N. C. 518, 64 S. E. 366; Pritchard v. Sanderson, 92 N. C. 41. It is true that the defendants allege in general terms that they have a meritorious defense, but they do not set forth sufficient facts to justify the court in so holding.

[3] The defendants contend that C. S. § 660, provides:

"If the appellant fails to have his appeal docketed as required by law, the appellee may, at the term of court next succeeding the term to which the appeal is taken, have the case placed upon the docket, and upon motion the judgment of the justice shall be affirmed"

—and argues that failure to do so is a waiver of objection on the ground that the appellants failed to docket the appeal at the first term of the court, beginning more than 10 days after the judgment was taken before the justice of the peace. But this court has often held that this remedy, like that of docketing and dismissing appeals to this court under rule 17 (66 S. E. vii), is optional with the appellee, and that a failure to exercise such right cannot avail an appellant who has not brought up his appeal in apt time. Davenport v. Grissom, 113 N. C. 38, 18 S. E. 78, and other cases cited under C. S. 660.

It is absolutely necessary that there should be a regular order of procedure within the courts. The right to appeal is not an absolute right, but dependent upon the observance of prescribed regulations. If that were not so, at least half of the time which the courts can apply to the trial upon their merits of appeals which have been brought up by those diligent to observe the procedure of the court will be devoted to the consideration of excuses by those who have not been careful to do so.

[4] The defendants further contend that C. S. § 660, provides that the writ of recordari may issue in cases heretofore allowed by law, but those cases are "where the party has lost his right to appeal otherwise than by his own default." Marsh v. Cohen, 68 N. C. 283. See instances cited under C. S. 630, under heading "Recordari."

The motion for recordari was properly de-

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 23, 1921.)

1. Wills \Rightarrow 675—Wish that devisee should will property to certain person held not to create trust.

Under a will giving testator's entire estate to a sister, by stating that it was testator's wish that she should make a will and leave all of her property to a certain nephew, held to give the sister absolute title in fee, and that no trust was created; the expressions of "wish," "desire," etc., not being construed as creating trusts in the absence of a clear indication of such intent.

2. Wills \Rightarrow 597(1)—No words necessary to enlarge devise into absolute fee.

No words are necessary to enlarge an estate devised or bequeathed into an absolute fee, but restraining expressions must be used to confine the gift to the life of a devisee or legatee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Harding, Judge.

Action by Alice V. Springs against John L. Springs and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This is an action to remove a cloud upon title submitted upon the pleadings and agreed statement of facts. Richard A. Springs, of Charlotte, died in 1879. On June 28, 1870, he wrote and signed the following paper writings, which were admitted to probate in Mecklenburg superior court on July 5, 1879, the whole of said writings being in testator's own handwriting, except the signature of Jno. F. Orr as a witness, to wit:

"Charlotte, N. C., June 28, 1870.

"To Whom It May Concern: Knowing the uncertainty of life and wishing to have my worldly goods disposed of according to my wishes, I make my last will and testament.

"I will first that all my debts be paid. Secondly, I will, devise, give and bequeath all my real and personal estate and valuables of every kind to my sister, Alice V. Springs, and I wish Gen. Robert D. Johnston to act as trustee for her until her twenty-third birthday. Given under my hand and seal this the 28th day of June, 1870. R. A. Springs. [Seal.]

"Witness: John F. Orr."

"To my Sister Alice: When you are made acquainted with the contents of this will it is my wish that you make a will immediately and leave all of your property to our nephew John M. Springs. Should you marry afterward you can then tear up the will. My object is to have my property given to you first, but should you die without children, I wish you to leave your property to Johnny Springs.

"Very affectionately, your brother,

"R. A. Springs."

The testator had never married and left him surviving five sisters, one of whom is the plaintiff, the other four being then married, one brother, and the children of a deceased brother, who had left a widow and five minor children; the defendant John L. Springs being next to the youngest of them and the only boy. The testator left an estate, real and personal, including a half interest in fee simple in a lot in Charlotte described in the complaint; the whole valued at that time at about $13,300. At the date of the paper writing and at the death of the testator, the plaintiff had property, estimated to be worth $2,000 or $2,500 inherited from her father.

The only question involved in this appeal is whether under the will of Richard A. Springs the plaintiff was seized of an absolute fee-simple title to the property in question to the exclusion of the defendants. The court below so held, and the defendants appealed.

Cochran & Beam, of Charlotte, W. B. Council, of Hickory, and John M. Robinson, of Charlotte, for appellants.

Cansler & Cansler and Clarkson, Taliaferro & Clarkson, all of Charlotte, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. [1] The defendants contend that the will and the lower script having been probated in common form, the lower script has been adjudicated to be a part of the will. We do not deem it essential to discuss this point, for taking it to be true that it has been so adjudicated, we think that the words in the script are simply precatory and not mandatory. It would seem that the appended letter was not intended to operate as a part of the will, but as merely a private letter of recommendation; but passing that by, and taking it to have been proven as a part of the will, still it seems to us that the effect is not at all different.

The will itself, excluding the script, is a devise absolute in terms, and it will not be impressed with a trust by reason of words of "request" or "desire" contained in the subsequent and independent clause. The words used in the will proper are unequivocal and clearly vested a fee simple absolute in the plaintiff and did not create a trust. The words of the script, taken as a part of the will, should be taken as having been used in their usual and commonly accepted sense, and in the absence of clear indication of a contrary intent, expressions of "wish," "hope," etc., are not to be construed as creating a trust.

The will was complete in itself and disposed of all his property absolutely in his sister the plaintiff. It is given under his hand and seal and is witnessed. While the seal was not necessary, it indicates an intention of making it his solemn act, and as such he had it duly witnessed, and it is directed to the public generally. The script appended on the same sheet is evidently an intimate letter addressed "To My Sister Alice," and has no seal nor witnesses. The first line of this script states to his sister that when she is made acquainted "with the contents of this will," it is his wish that she would make a will leaving "all your property" to their nephew John M. Springs. These words embrace the property which he knew the plaintiff had already inherited from her father, as well as that which she would take by virtue of this will. This indicates that it was a mere wish, for he had no power to require her to devise "all" her property to the nephew. He further states in this note to his sister that if she should marry after making such will she could tear it up, notwithstanding the request that he had made, and he further states that his object is to give his property to her first, but that if she should die without children he wished her to leave "your property to Johnnie Springs," and he signs this script, "Very affectionately, your brother."

The broad and comprehensive terms of the devise to the plaintiff made her the sole beneficiary. No logical reason has been assigned why, if the testator desired to make the contents of his affectionate note to his sister a limitation on his absolute devise to her, he did not incorporate it in the will as signed, sealed, and witnessed at the same time. The fact that he did not do so is conclusive evidence that he did not intend the letter to operate as an imperative testamentary command imposed as a charge upon his devise of all his property to her. Indeed, he suggests in his note, not only that she should devise all her property which would include that which she already had, as well as that which he had given her, but he adds that if she should marry she could tear up the will, thus indicating that her compliance with his request was not absolute or imperative.

Had the testator desired and intended to place an obligatory burden upon the devise to his sister whereby, in the event of her death without children, his property should go to their nephew, he would certainly have written, "But should you die without children my property (or the property herein devised) shall go to John Springs." And, furthermore, he would have included a provision of such importance in the will proper which he had signed, sealed, and caused to be witnessed; whereas there was no witness or seal to the script. It is significant that his request to his niece is one which he knew could not be obligatory, for it is the expression of a wish that she should devise all "her" property to the nephew which he knew was not binding upon her, for he was aware that she already had independent property of her own and points out that if she desired she could afterwards tear up the will if so made.

It is true that under the old English decisions, which were followed by a few of the early cases in this country, the expression of a wish by the testator, like that of a sovereign, was construed as a command; but all the later cases both in England and in this country repudiate the doctrine, and hold that in the absence of a clear indication of a contrary intent, expressions of "wish," "desire," etc., are to be taken as used in their commonly accepted sense and are not to be artificially construed by the courts as a trust. In this state to this effect, Alston v. Lea, 59 N. C. 27; Batchelor v. Macon, 69 N. C. 545; Young v. Young, 68 N. C. 309; St. James, etc., v. Bagley, 138 N. C. 384, 50 S. E. 841, 70 L. R. A. 160; Hayes v. Franklin, 141 N. C. 599, 54 S. E. 432; Fellows v. Durfey, 163 N. C. 305, 79 S. E. 621; Carter v. Strickland, 165 N. C. 69, 80 S. E. 961, Ann. Cas. 1915D. 416; Hardy v. Hardy, 174 N. C. 505, 93 S. E. 976; Laws v. Christmas, 178 N. C. 359, 100 S. E. 587; Waldroop v. Waldroop, 179 N. C. 674, 103 S. E. 381.

The decisions are to the same effect elsewhere and are summed up 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646, notes; Ann. Cas. 1915D. 416, note; 2 Underhill on Wills, 1151 et seq.; 1 Perry on Trusts, 147.

The subject is nowhere better stated than in a review of the cases in this and other states by Mr. Justice Hoke in Carter v. Strickland, 165 N. C. 69, 80 S. E. 961, Ann. Cas. 1915D. 416, as follows:

"Some of the earlier English cases, and they have been followed by decisions in this country, are to the effect that a trust will be ingrafted or imposed upon an estate, absolute in terms, or upon its holder, by reason of precatory words in a will whenever 'the objects of the precatory language are certain and the subject of the recommendation or wish is also certain'—a position supposed to best effectuate the intent of the testator. A consideration of the later cases, however, will show that, in the decisions referred to, the principle has been too broadly stated, and it is now the prevailing doctrine, certainly so in this jurisdiction, that such words will be given their ordinary significance, and will not have the effect, as stated, unless from the terms and dispositions of the will and the circumstances relevant to its proper construction it clearly appears that they are to be considered as imperative and that the testator intended to create a trust."

That case has been cited with approval in the subsequent cases on the subject, and is almost exactly on all fours with this case. In 2 Underhill on Wills, 1156, it is said:

"The current of the decisions both in England and the United States indubitably shows that precatory trusts are not to be favored nor is their extension to be encouraged by the courts."

Indeed, C. S. § 4162, has made this ruling statutory:

"When real estate shall be devised to any person, the same shall be held and construed to be a devise in fee simple, unless such devise shall, in plain and express words, show, or it shall be plainly intended by the will, or some part thereof, that the testator intended to convey an estate of less dignity."

[2] The rule is well settled that in a will no words are necessary to enlarge an estate devised or bequeathed into an absolute fee. On the contrary, restraining expressions must be used to confine the gift to the life of devisee or legatee. Holt v. Holt, 114 N. C. 241, 18 S. E. 967; Jones v. Richmond, 161 N. C. 553, 77 S. E. 950.

In Griffin v. Commander, 163 N. C. 230, 79 S. E. 499, where the testator devised to his wife "all the remainder of my estate, real and personal, with power to give and devise the same after her death, to our beloved children and grandchildren," it was held that she took in fee simple.

In Fellowes v. Durfey, 163 N. C. 305, 79 S. E. 621, where after giving the property to the testator's widow in subsequent clauses the will goes into elaborate details and directions as to advancements and in other respects, authorizing her to make provision for their children, the court held that the widow took an estate in fee simple absolute.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

WALKER, J. (concurring in result). I concur in the decision of this case, but not altogether in the reason assigned in the court's opinion therefor. The letter of Mr. Springs to his sister, which was written at the same time as the will, was not intended to be a part of the same, but merely a collateral request to his sister which should only suggest his wishes, as to the subsequent disposition of his property by her, but which should not be imperative upon her, but strictly discretionary or optional; that is, a thing she might do or not as she pleased. This is shown by his not incorporating it within his will, as a part thereof, but expressing his wish in the form of a letter to her, without being witnessed by Mr. John F. Orr. As the letter was probated with the will as a part thereof (which should not have been done, as it was clearly not intended to be any part of the will), I must recognize the principle of law applicable to such a case, that the probate cannot be attacked, except directly, for the usual rule with regard to judgments rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction applies to the decrees of a competent court admitting a will to probate, and to the extent that the same can be attacked only by a proceeding immediately directed to that end, and they cannot be assailed collaterally. Gardner on Wills (1903) p. 337; 40 Cyc. 1370-1377, especially the latter page; Hamp-ton v. Hardin, 88 N. C. 592; London v. Rail-road, 88 N. C. 534; Edwards v. White, 180 N. C. 55, 103 S. E. 901; In re Beauchamp's Will, 146 N. C. 254, 59 S. E. 687; Starnes v. Thompson, 173 N. C. 466, 92 S. E. 259; In re Thompson's Will, 178 N. C. 540, 101 S. E. 107.

But, admitting this to be the inflexible rule of the law, it is nevertheless proper to consider the nature or character of the two documents, and the fact that they were prepared and signed at the same time, in passing upon the meaning of the testator, and upon an examination of them in the light of the facts and surrounding circumstances, my opinion is that it was clearly not the intention of Mr. Springs that his language should be considered as imperative, but merely precatory; that is, the expression of a mere wish, without intending to bind his sister at all to its observance. She might comply with it, or not, as she deemed best. The fact that her entire will was revocable by her upon her marriage favors this construction. If it were otherwise, and the letter had been made formally a part of his will—that is, embodied in it—I would be compelled to hold that the words he used were not merely precatory, and the making of her will purely discretionary, but that they would be imperative, or mandatory, upon her, and I have written this opinion to exclude the conclusion that I assented to the statement in the opinion that the words, considered by themselves, are precatory, and not imperative in character.

My opinion is that Miss Alice V. Springs is not compelled to comply with the request contained in the letter, but may do so, or not, as she may choose, and with perfect freedom to act in that way.

Justice HOKE concurs in the opinion of Justice WALKER.

ROANE et al. v. McCoy et al. (No. 595.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 21, 1921.)

1. Boundaries §35(3)—Surveyor's testimony as to location of lines held admissible though some not surveyed by him.

Testimony of a witness who had surveyed all the lines of the grant under which plaintiffs claimed title except the last three, which he stated followed the courses and distances called for, that a certain line would run north of some cut timber, was admissible, his testimony being in effect that, if the lines as to which he testified represented the true location of the grant, timber had been cut inside the boundaries.

2. Boundaries §35(3)—Testimony as to correspondence of witness' plat with plat in evidence held admissible as illustrating testimony as to surveys made.

Testimony of a witness who surveyed the boundaries of a grant before a plat in evidence was made that his plat corresponded therewith, that he could indicate thereon the survey he had made, and that he had found an oak at one of the corners, was admissible as illustrating his testimony as to the surveys he himself had made.

3. Witnesses §269(11)—Testimony on cross-examination as to matter not yet offered in evidence held properly excluded.

In an action for trespass on land, an answer of plaintiffs' witness on cross-examination to a question as to whether he knew the location of the grant under which defendants claimed title was properly excluded, where the latter grant had not been offered in evidence.

4. Appeal and error §1058(1)—Exclusion of evidence afterward admitted not reversible error.

The exclusion of evidence afterward admitted is not reversible error.

5. Trial §295(8)—Instruction as to burden of proof held not erroneous in view of entire charge and admissions in pleadings.

In an action for trespass on land, where the court instructed the jury that the burden was on plaintiffs to establish their title by the greater weight of the evidence, and defendants did not expressly deny plaintiffs' title, but only denied that they were the owners of such part of their grant as lapped on defendants' grant, an instruction that, unless defendants showed by the greater weight of the evidence that the lines of plaintiffs' grant lapped on defendants, the latter's possession outside the boundaries of plaintiffs' grant would not be extended so as to defeat or affect plaintiffs' title, was not erroneous, the instruction being considered as a part of the entire charge, and in connection with the admissions of the pleadings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Macon County; Long, Judge.

Action by C. T. Roane and another against Julius McCoy and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. No error.

Plaintiffs claimed title under a grant from the state to themselves, No. 16105, dated December 31, 1903, and registered January 27, 1904.

The defendants alleged:

That on May 20, 1864, the state issued grant No. 2924 to H. H. P. McCoy. That in 1876, or prior thereto, H. H. P. McCoy sold the land described in this grant to D. McDowell McCoy, his brother, and executed a deed in fee which had been lost. That H. H. P. McCoy had delivered to D. McDowell McCoy grant No. 2924, after making the following indorsement, which was signed also by his wife:

"I, H. P. McCoy, do assign the within land to D. McDowell McCoy to have and to hold forever. This Jan. 14, 1875."

That D. McDowell McCoy had died intestate without issue, and his real estate had descended to his brothers, who had agreed to a verbal division of the land. That grant No. 2924 had been allotted to J. J. W. McCoy, and that he had entered into possession. That thereafter, on or about April 3, 1895, deeds had been mutually executed by J. J. W. McCoy and W. L. McCoy, by which J. J. W. McCoy had conveyed all his interest in the estate of D. McDowell McCoy east of a certain described line and W. L. McCoy had conveyed to J. J. W. McCoy all the land described in grant No. 2924, which lies to the west of the line referred to. That J. J. W. McCoy had conveyed this land to the defendant M. M. McCoy, and that said McCoy has been in the adverse possession under color of title more than 21 years.

The heirs at law of H. H. P. McCoy had previously been allowed to interplead and file a complaint alleging that they were the owners of the land in grant No. 2924.

There seems to have been no serious controversy as to the location of grant No. 16105; but the interpleaders and the defendants, claiming respectively to be the owners of the land in grant No. 2924, contended that the junior grant lapped upon or was embraced in the senior grant. The controversy turned upon the location of grant No. 2924; for if this grant and grant No. 16105 did not interfere, there was no ground for denying that the plaintiffs were the owners of the land described in their grant. The interpleaders alleged that neither the plaintiffs nor defendants had title, and alleged that the interpleaders were the sole owners.

The issues and the answers were as follows:

"(1) Are the plaintiffs, Siler and Roane, the owners of the lands described in the complaint, and within the red lines on the map, designated by the red letters and lines from red A to B, C, D, E, F, G, and back to red A? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Have the defendants Mrs. M. M. McCoy and Julius McCoy unlawfully trespassed upon the lands referred to in the first issue, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(3) If the defendants have so wrongfully trespassed, what damages, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled to recover of the defendants Mrs. M. M. McCoy and Julius McCoy? Answer: $10.

"(4) Is the defendant Mrs. M. M. McCoy the owner of the lands embraced under state grant 2924? Answer: —.

"(5) Does state grant No. 2924, under which Mrs. M. M. McCoy and the heirs at law of H. H. P. McCoy claim, include any portion of the lands included in grant 16105; and, if so, what portion thereof, as represented on the map? Answer: —.

"(6) Are the defendants, the heirs at law of H. H. P. McCoy, the owners of the lands embraced under state grant No. 2924, as alleged by them in their interplea? Answer: —.

"(7) What damages, if any, is Mrs. M. M. McCoy entitled to recover of the plaintiffs? Answer: —."

Judgment was entered for the plaintiffs, and the defendants appealed.

Henry G. Robertson, of Franklin, for appellants.

T. J. Johnston and R. D. Sisk, both of Franklin, for appellees.

ADAMS, J. [1, 2] The first five exceptions must be overruled. John H. Dalton, a witness for the plaintiff, testified that he had surveyed all the lines of the grant under which the plaintiffs claimed title, except the last three; that he had prepared the plat; that the last three lines followed the courses and distances called for; and that the red lines represented the land embraced in the grant issued to the plaintiffs. The witness was then permitted to testify over the defendants' objection that the line from E to F "will run north of some cut timber." A. T. Siler, a witness for plaintiffs, testified that he surveyed the boundaries of the plaintiffs' grant in 1893 and in 1894; that he had a record of his surveys showing that his plat corresponded with Dalton's; that he could indicate on Dalton's map the survey he had made; and that he had found an oak at one of the corners. To all this evidence the defendants excepted.

The former witness described the lines he had actually surveyed, and the others which he said indicated the last three calls in the grant, and testified in effect that, if these lines represented the true location of the grant, timber had been cut inside the boundaries; and the examination of the latter witness was so carefully limited by the court that it could have been understood only as illustrating the testimony of the witness as to the surveys he had previously made.

[3] The plaintiffs called as a witness Julius McCoy, one of the defendants, to prove the alleged trespass. On cross-examination counsel for the defendants asked the witness if he knew the location of the grant under which the defendants claimed title. The grant had not then been offered in evidence, and the answer was properly excluded. His honor, however, explicitly stated that the witness might be examined as to the location, in case the grant should afterward be introduced by the defendants.

[4] The excluded evidence which is the subject of the ninth exception was afterward admitted; and exceptions 8, 10, 11, 12, and 17 were relevant only to the controversy between the interpleaders and the defendants, and, upon return of the verdict for the plaintiffs, became immaterial.

[5] His honor instructed the jury that, unless the defendants and the interpleaders had shown by the greater weight of the evidence that the lines of the plaintiffs' grant lapped upon the grant under which the defendants claimed, the possession of the defendants or interpleaders, or of those under whom they claimed, outside the boundaries of the plaintiffs' grant would not be extended so as to defeat or affect the title of the plaintiffs. The instruction must be considered as a part of the entire charge, and in connection with the admissions in the pleadings. His honor had previously told the jury that upon the plaintiffs rested the burden of establishing their title by the greater weight of the evidence. In their answer the defendants did not expressly deny the plaintiffs' title, but only denied that the plaintiffs were the owners of such part of grant No. 16105 as may lap upon grant No. 2924. It will be observed that the defendants attempted to defeat the plaintiffs' recovery by showing an interference of the two grants. Under these circumstances the charge of his honor as to the burden of proof and as to possession under grant No. 2924 is free from error; and the instruction as to the measure of damages is a substantial compliance with the rule stated in Whitfield v. Lumber Co., 152 N. C. 214, 67 S. E. 512.

The remaining exceptions have received full consideration, and must be disallowed. The controversy between the parties was reduced almost entirely to questions of fact pertaining to the location of the grant under which the defendants claimed, and the jury adopted the contentions of the plaintiff. We find in the record no sufficient cause for disturbing the verdict or the judgment.

(182 N. C. 894)

STATE v. SLAGLE et al. (No. 534.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 14, 1921.)

1. Homicide §268—Evidence held to justify denial of nonsuit.

On a trial for homicide, evidence held to justify the refusal to grant a nonsuit against the state.

2. Criminal law §366(2)—Evidence as to deceased's acts two days before homicide and as to tracking him after homicide held admissible as res gestæ.

Where there was evidence that deceased was murdered at a blockade still on Monday, evidence that he came to his home from the direction of the still on the preceding Saturday, that on the Thursday following the murder his tracks to and from the still were followed, etc., held admissible as part of the res gestæ.

3. Criminal law §1169(5)—No reversible error in admitting evidence admissible as to defendant who was subsequently granted nonsuit.

Where evidence that one of the defendants told a witness that another defendant killed deceased was admissible against the defendant making such statement, there was no reversible error in admitting it, where the court expressly confined it to the purpose for which it was admissible and after a nonsuit was granted such defendant told the jury to disregard it.

4. Criminal law §656(6)—Ordering defendant held on another charge not an expression of opinion as to credibility of state's witnesses.

Where the testimony of witnesses for the state on a trial for murder on which the state's case largely depended also showed that one of the defendants as to whom a nonsuit was granted was guilty of distilling, it was not an expression of opinion as to their credibility for the judge, in the presence of the jury, after granting such nonsuit, to order such defendant held for distilling and to require him to give bail.

5. Criminal law §783½—On nonsuit as to one defendant, instruction to disregard evidence competent only against him held proper.

Where the court admitted evidence which was competent only against one defendant as to whom a nonsuit was granted, he properly instructed the jury not to consider it after granting such nonsuit.

6. Criminal law §814(5)—Instruction that contentions supported by evidence should be considered held to protect defendants' rights on disagreement as to contentions.

Where defendants' counsel in questioning the correctness of the court's statement of the contentions of the parties could not himself remember with certainty whether the contention then being stated was supported by evidence, the court sufficiently protected defendants' rights by telling the jury that any contention supported by evidence should be considered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; McElroy, Judge.

Sol Slagle and another were convicted of murder in the second degree, and they appeal. Affirmed.

The state's evidence tended to show that Luther Merrill left his home, 11 miles from Asheville in Buncombe county, about 2 o'clock in the afternoon of Monday, January 31, 1921, in the company of defendant, Sol Slagle. His wife saw him no more until she was taken to the place where was his dead body, on Wednesday afternoon, February 2, 1921. It was lying about 116 yards from the public road and behind a chestnut tree. It had evidently been removed from the place of the killing to the chestnut tree, for his hat and extra pair of shoes were placed near the body and his overcoat was thrown across it. There is evidence of threats made by Sol Slagle that if Luther ever fooled around him he would kill him and do away with him and that they were all at the still last fall at the time this statement was made. He further said that Luther had "turned him up" a time or two. It appeared that Sol Slagle, Charlie Slagle, and Latt Slagle were operating a blockade still with Eli Kilpatrick, not far from Sol's house. It was in a dugout on the back of a branch and covered over with leaves. A large pistol belonging to Latt Slagle was seen by the witness at Sol Slagle's house, where Latt lived a short time before the tragedy. About 400 yards from where the body was found, an officer, Dillingham by name, discovered where a wagon had been turned around and backed against the bank of the road with the prints of the feet of horses appearing to have been standing there some time. A little ravine ran from the road there, and Dillingham followed this ravine up and found the blockade still in a dugout, as hereinbefore mentioned. He described where the still was, and what he did at that place. From the still to where he had discovered the wagon tracks and horse tracks the distance was 238 steps. He pursued the tracks of the horse and wagon, and also examined the ground at the red bank, where the wagon had been backed, and he saw well-defined tracks of a man in the soft earth. He inserted a shoe gotten at Sol Slagle's house into this track and it fitted it. He measured the wagon tracks, and also the wagon at Sol Slagle's, and the width of the tires were exactly the same. The left hind foot of the horse, in the tracks made at the bank, showed two high nails; that is, new nails that had been driven in after the shoe had been put on. The track at the soft place in the earth and the foot of Sol Slagle's horse were identical in size, and Sol Slagle's horse had high nails in his shoes. The witness examined the wagon also, and at the right-hand side found a blood spot that had run down from the top of the board. It ran down the board and then seeped through where the board comes to the bottom and on the brakes. He discovered other blood spots on the wagon. Dillingham saw the body of deceased at the undertaking establishment. The first shot hit just above the hip bone and went through to the other side, and the other shot was about four inches higher. The upper shot looked as though it had ranged a little downward. The lower shot apparently went straight through. The bullets, after passing through the body, lodged in the clothes of the deceased. They were steel jacketed and in size 45 caliber. He also found a pair of overalls, a jumper jacket, and a pair of shoes at Sol Slagle's, and on the jumper jacket were blood stains. The board with blood stains on it, the shoes, bullets, and overalls were all introduced in evidence.

Onie Kilpatrick and his father, Eli Kilpatrick, both testified that they were eyewitnesses of the killing of Luther Merrill by Latt Slagle and Sol Slagle. Eli testified:

"I was on the other side of the branch from the still, within 25 or 30 yards of it. I saw Sol and Latt and Luther Merrill there at the still. Luther Merrill was sitting down when I first noticed him, and Sol and Luther were arguing somehow or another, I couldn't understand exactly what they were saying; they were arguing, and Luther raised up, and Latt shot him. Luther just raised and began to turn like he was going to run, and, when he did that, why he just lit in shooting at him, Latt did; I saw him until the shooting was over and he fell, and I just went on home; moved pretty fast. I didn't go back up there. I never said anything to either one of the Slagle boys about it. I stayed at home that night."

The first exception was to the admission of this witness' testimony as to the acts of his son on Saturday prior to his disappearance. The second exception was to his testimony that he trailed the tracks of deceased on Thursday after the body was found, the tracks having been made on Saturday. M. L. Merrill testified that on Monday he heard shots in the direction of the still, that deceased came to his house on Saturday to get some corn to go to mill, that he did not see him any more that day, but saw him and had a conversation with him on Sunday. Asked whether deceased had been to the still, he answered, after the court had stopped him when he started to tell what deceased said, that he did not see any tracks or make any examination. The fourth exception was that the court erred in permitting M. L. Merrill to testify to what he did after the body was found, as to the action of the deceased on Saturday before he disappeared on Monday. The fifth exception was to the admission of testimony that Charlie Slagle, who was indicted but obtained a nonsuit, told the witness that Latt Slagle shot and killed deceased.

J. Scroop Styles, of Asheville, for appellants.

James S. Manning, Atty. Gen., Frank Nash, Asst. Atty. Gen., and A. Hall Johnston, of Asheville, for the State.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The theory of the state was that Sol and Latt Slagle killed Luther Merrill at the still and then carried his body to the wagon at the road and thence to the place where it was found on the following Wednesday. With plain and direct evidence of this sort, as to the actual killing of the deceased by the defendants, Sol and Latt, there can certainly be no foundation for defendants' exceptions 5 and 7, to the judge's refusal to give judgment as of nonsuit against the state at the conclusion of the state's testimony and again at the conclusion of all the testimony.

[2, 3] Exceptions 1 and 2 were taken to evidence which detailed circumstances connected with the disappearance of the deceased. Exception 4 was to similar evidence, and in each case it seems that this evidence was material as part of the res gestae. Exception 5 was taken to evidence plainly admissible as to Charles Slagle and confined expressly by the judge to the purpose for which it was admissible, and after Charles Slagle was eliminated, as a defendant, by a judgment of nonsuit in his favor, the judge, again in his charge to the jury, expressly told them that they must disregard this evidence.

[4] The defendants, in their brief, refer to an error which nowhere sufficiently appears in their assignments of error. It is thus set out in the record:

"It is agreed by the attorneys of record, whose names are hereto attached, that, at the time the motion was sustained as to Charles Slagle, as set out in the record, there was no charge of distilling against Charlie Slagle, but the court ordered him held, pending an indictment based upon the testimony given by Jim Lawrence, Oney Kilpatrick, and Eli Kilpatrick, and ordered Charlie Slagle in custody, fixing his bond at $1,500, and all this was done in the presence of the jury. This may be treated under the defendants' exception No. 6."

But we will discuss it nevertheless.

The right of a nisi prius judge to order a witness, or any one else, into immediate custody for a contempt committed in the presence of the court in session, is unquestioned. But the committing of a witness, in either a criminal or a civil action, into immediate custody for perjury in the presence of the jury, is almost universally held to be an invasion of the rights of the party offering the witness, and as an intimation of opinion on the part of the judge, prohibited by the statute. State v. Swink, 151 N. C. 726, 66 S. E. 448, and the cases there cited. In this case, the charge that Charles Slagle was guilty of "blockading" was dependent upon the testimony of Jim Lawrence and the two Kilpatrick. As it turned out, the state's case against the two defendants, Sol and Latt Slagle, for murder, was also largely dependent upon the credit the jury should give to these witnesses. It seems that this was not an expression of opinion by the judge upon their credibility. In no sense was it a direct attack upon the credit of a principal witness such as there was in Swink's Case and the cases similar to it. There was nothing to do in the case of Charles Slagle except to discharge him after the nonsuit, unless there was another charge pending against him, and so this was only an attempt by the judge to hold him to answer to another charge, which arose out of the evidence, and the effect of this was, not to give these witnesses any additional credit, or to express an opinion favorable to the credibility of their testimony, but simply to say that, on the whole case, there was probable cause against Charles Slagle and a necessity to investigate further, which investigation could only be made by a jury in like manner as the pending investigation as to the other two Slagles was being made by a jury.

The course of the presiding judge in demanding bail of Charles Slagle, upon the charge of unlawfully dealing in liquor, commonly called "blockading," which is a violation not only of our statute but of the "Volstead Act" of Congress (41 Stat. 305), did not, in law, prejudice the defendants. The judge did not express any opinion as to whether Slagle was guilty, or as to whether the testimony of the two witnesses was true, or not, but he merely acted upon the supposition that the simple oaths of the two men, as to the fact, were sufficient to show probable cause as to Slagle, and added nothing to the credibility of the other two men; and we are quite sure it was so intended by the judge and not so regarded by the jury. It was one of the ordinary incidents of a trial, and while it may always be better to send the jury out before taking such action, it sometimes becomes necessary for a judge to act with great promptness in such cases to prevent any escape of the offender. State v. Swink, supra, cited by the defendants' counsel in support of this alleged exception, is not at all in point. There the court by its action directly impeached the credibility of the party's principal witness by binding him over for perjury, which, of course, would prejudice the defendant for whom he had testified. We doubt if this exception is properly raised in the record; but we have, nevertheless, commented upon it.

[5] The court admitted certain evidence which was competent against Charles Slagle so long as he remained a defendant, and when he was retired by the nonsuit the judge properly instructed the jury not to consider it.

[8] Several exceptions were taken to the judge's statement of contentions of the parties, but only one was called to the court's attention, and that raised an issue between the judge and counsel as to what the evidence was on the particular point. This relates to the supposed evidence as to defendants' being seen while tracking Merrill and as to whisky being found near the house. The response of the judge was sufficient to protect the rights of the defendants. He told the jury that if there were any contentions supported by evidence to consider them, which implied that those not so supported should not be considered. The counsel could not himself remember with certainty whether the contention then being stated was supported by evidence. He merely said that he did not then recall any such evidence.

There is no merit at all in the other exceptions, and they, therefore, require no separate discussion.

We have carefully reviewed and considered this very long record, and find no reversible error therein. The defendants' counsel safeguarded the rights of the defendants at every point by a very able argument, but there is no reason for disturbing the judgment.

No error.

REESE v. WOODS. (No. 597.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 21, 1921.)

Evidence §271(17)—Declarations of deceased grantor that deed was not delivered are incompetent.

In a suit by the grantee of a decedent to remove as a cloud on his title a deed executed to defendant by his grantor prior to the deed to plaintiff, evidence of declarations by the grantor, made seven years after the registration of defendant's deed, that the deed was not delivered and was not to take effect until defendant agreed to support grantor, were self-serving declarations and inadmissible.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cherokee County; Long, Judge.

Action by J. M. Reese against Worth Woods to remove a cloud on title. Judgment for the plaintiff, and defendant appeals. New trial granted.

The purpose of the action is to have declared void and set aside as a cloud on plaintiff's title an alleged deed from W. L. F. Woods and wife, Laura, to defendant, appearing on the registration books of Cherokee county as of December, 1912, on the ground that the said deed had never been delivered to defendant. The cause was before the court on a former appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of nonsuit against him in the lower court, and same will be found reported in 180 N. C. 631, 105 S. E. 337. Pursuant to the opinion in that appeal setting aside the judgment of nonsuit, the cause in the present trial was submitted to the jury on appropriate issues, and there was verdict for plaintiff, Judgment on the verdict, and defendant excepted and appealed, assigning errors.

D. Witherspoon and Dillard & Hill, all of Murphy, for appellant.

J. N. Moody, of Murphy, for appellee.

HOKE, J. On the present trial it appeared that the land in dispute had been the property of W. L. F. Woods, who died on February 24, 1920. Plaintiff, a son of Mrs. Woods by a former husband, put on evidence a deed from said W. L. F. Woods and wife, Laura, to plaintiff, and his wife, Ella, for the land in dispute dated February 27, 1919, registered February 28, 1919, conveying the land in controversy and containing the clause:

"This deed is made upon the consideration that J. M. Reese and wife shall support and provide for W. L. F. Woods and wife, Laura, during their lives and give them a decent burial suitable to their station in life, etc. On full compliance with above conditions, this deed to be in full force and effect; otherwise void."

For the purpose of attacking it, plaintiff introduced the alleged deed from W. L. F. Woods and wife, Laura, to defendant, dated April 1, 1912, registered December 6, 1912, in said county; the same being in regular form with general warranty, covering same land "and without reservations, exceptions, or conditions."

There was evidence on part of plaintiff tending to show that the deed under which defendant claims was never in fact delivered, but, having been signed and acknowledged by grantors, W. L. F. Woods and wife, was withheld until the alleged grantee, Worth Woods, who was a son of W. L. F. Woods by a former wife, should enter into some binding obligation for support, etc., or because such obligation was not expressed in the deed; that same was in the custody and control of said Laura when defendant surreptitiously took it from the bureau drawer where it was kept and had it put on the registry, without any authority therefor from the alleged grantors, or either of them.

On the part of defendant there was evidence offered in support of his alleged deed, among other testimony being declarations of W. L. F. Woods tending to show he had directed the registration of the deed, etc.

In reply, Mr. J. H. McCall, who had been acting as one of plaintiff's attorneys, having withdrawn from the case as attorney, was offered as a witness by plaintiff, and over defendant's objection was allowed to testify, in effect, that, in a conversation with W. L. F. Woods some time in the spring of 1919, said Woods told witness that the deed to his son had been prepared and acknowledged, but that on ascertaining that the same contained no provision for the support of declarant and his wife, and other things the alleged grantee was to do as part of the consideration, the delivery of the deed was withheld, and same had been taken and put on registry without authority, etc. It will be noted that this declaration is seven years, or near that, after the alleged execution and registry of the defendant's deed, and is clearly a self-serving declaration on the part of declarant in impeachment of defendant's deed and in favor of the declarant's own title, and certainly in favor of the right to support stipulated for in the deed to plaintiff.

In our opinion the exception of defendant to the admission of this evidence must be sustained, and for the error defendant is entitled to a new trial of the issue. Roe v. Journigan, 181 N. C. 180, 106 S. E. 680.

New trial.

SHEPHERD v. SELLERS. (No. 596.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 21, 1921.)

Evidence §471(6)—Witness competent to state his understanding from what was said relative to payment of commissions.

In an action for broker's commissions, where a witness was examined as to his conversation with defendant concerning the matter, the witness' statement that "he 'understood' that defendant was to take care of plaintiff," and on further question stating what was said, was competent to show witness' understanding of what defendant had said.

Appeal from Superior Court, Macon County; Long, Judge.

Action by T. B. Shepherd against W. H. Sellers. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. No error.

Civil action to recover agent's commissions on the sale of certain real estate.

There was evidence, adduced on the hearing, tending to show that the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff a reasonable compensation for his services if he would procure a purchaser for the defendant's farm at the price of $5,000. A sale was effected upon these terms, but the defendant declined to pay the plaintiff, contending that the amount received was to be net and that plaintiff agreed to look to the purchaser for his commissions.

Upon the traverse and issues thus joined, there was a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Defendant appealed, assigning errors.

T. J. Johnston, H. G. Robertson, and R. D. Sisk, all of Franklin, for appellant.

Johnston & Horn and Gilmer A. Jones, all of Franklin, and Bourne, Parker & Jones, of Asheville, for appellee.

STACY, J. The defendant's principal exception is directed to the ruling of the court in allowing the witness Greenwood to give his "understanding" of the contract with respect to the plaintiff's commissions. The witness was being examined as to his conversation with the defendant concerning the matter. He had stated, in answer to a question as to what the defendant had said, if anything, in regard to paying the plaintiff for his services, that he could not remember exactly what was said. He was then asked: "Mr. Sellers did say that he would take $5,000 for the farm but would not be responsible to Mr. Shepherd for anything?" To this the witness replied: "No, as I understood it, he was to take care of Tom (plaintiff)." Defendant objected and moved to strike out the answer upon the ground that it comes within the rule prohibiting hearsay evidence; and, further, because it does not appear from whom, or what source, the witness obtained his information or understanding.

It will be conceded that the competency of this evidence must be determined by the fair and reasonable inference as to what the witness intended to say and did say. Plaintiff insists that the witness was only stating what he understood the defendant to say in regard to the matter, while the defendant contends his impression or understanding may have been, and doubtless was, obtained from some other source. We think the next succeeding question and answer, immediately following the defendant's objection, will suffice to make clear his meaning:

"Please state again just what you understood Sellers to say in regard to Shepherd getting a commission?" Answer: "I said, 'I will pay you $5,000, one-third in cash, and you settle with Shepherd,' and he said, 'All right.' Now, that is what was said."

From the foregoing, we think it reasonably appears that the witness was giving his understanding of what the defendant had said; and, if this be so, the evidence was competent. Gilliland v. Board of Education, 141 N. C. 482, 54 S. E. 413.

Speaking to a kindred and somewhat similar question in the case just cited, Hoke J., delivering the opinion, says:

"A witness who undertakes to testify to objective facts and qualifies his testimony by using the terms, 'I think,' or 'I have an impression,' etc., if the witness has had no physical observation or has made no note of the facts, but is merely stating to the court and jury his mental inference or deduction, this, as a rule, is incompetent. But if the witness has had opportunity to note relevant facts himself and did observe and note them, and simply qualifies his testimony in this way because his impression or memory is more or less indistinct, this, while in the form of opinion, is really the statement of a fact, and will be so received."

Quite a different question was presented in King v. Bynum, 137 N. C. 491, 49 S. E. 955, and we do not think our present holding conflicts, in any way, with the decision in that case.

Upon an examination of the whole case, we have found no material error which would justify our disturbing the verdict and judgment, or the result of the trial.

No error.

BOARD OF COM'RS OF MECKLENBURG COUNTY v. MECKLENBURG HIGHWAY COMMISSION. (No. 452.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 14, 1921.)

1. Highways \S 113(4)—County highway commission and not county board held bound to assume obligation for work done on state highway.

Pub. Loc. Laws 1921, c. 383, §§ 4, 12, 14, vests all local authority over the roads of Mecklenburg county in the county highway commission, and requires the board of county commissioners to place all funds available for such purpose to the credit of the commission, and hence the latter, and not the board, should assume the balance due to the state highway commission for work done by a state contractor, after the county highway commission assumed jurisdiction, on a part of a state highway in the county control of which was vested in the State Highway Commission by Pub. Laws 1921, c. 2.

2. Highways \S 113(4) — Proceeds of bonds being sole highway funds in hand held county highway commission may pay obligation therefrom.

There being no highway funds in hand except those derived from sale of bonds, an obligation of the county highway commission to the State Highway Commission for work done on a part of a state highway in the county may be paid therefrom.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Shaw, Judge.

Controversy without action brought by the Board of Commissioners of Mecklenburg County against the Mecklenburg Highway Commission, submitted on agreed statement of facts. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Cansler & Cansler, of Charlotte, for appellant.

J. L. De Laney, of Charlotte, for appellee.

STACY, J. The following statement of the controversy, as taken from the facts agreed, will suffice for our present decision:

(1) The Legislature of 1921 established the Mecklenburg Highway Commission (chapter 383, Public Local Laws), and provided in section 4 of said act as follows:

"The Mecklenburg highway commission shall be invested with all the road powers and shall perform all the road duties which have heretofore been performed and exercised by the board of county commissioners of Mecklenburg county or by the road officials of the several townships within said county, or by any other body or person now or heretofore acting under authority of existing law in relation to the public roads of said county (other than the power to borrow money, issue evidences of indebtedness and levy taxes), whether under general law or a special law; and the management and control of all the public roads in said county shall be vested absolutely and entirely in the Mecklenburg highway commission, except roads under the exclusive control and management of the authorities of an incorporated city or town or the authorities of the state of North Carolina."

And again in section 12:

"All moneys on hand when this act takes effect or taxes received which were or shall be raised by Mecklenburg county, or by, or on behalf of any township therein for road purposes (other than money raised to pay the principal and interest of bonds or other outstanding indebtedness), whether raised by taxation, bond issues, or otherwise, shall, upon taking effect of this act, or when they are collected, be deposited with the county treasurer and kept by him in a separate fund or funds, and paid out only upon written orders of the highway commission, signed by the chairman and secretary, and countersigned by one other member of the commission. All road machinery, stock, implements and other property owned or used by Mecklenburg county, or by any township therein, shall upon the taking effect of this act be turned over to the highway commission."

(2) On April 4, 1921, the Mecklenburg highway commission assumed jurisdiction and control of all road work in Mecklenburg county, which had theretofore been exercised by the county board of commissioners and the trustees of the various townships in said county.

(3) In 1919 the commissioners of Mecklenburg county entered into a contract with the State Highway Commission whereby they agreed to pay one-half the cost of laying out and constructing about 14 miles of road in Mecklenburg county, known as project No. 55, which work the State Highway Commission was undertaking on its part with moneys derived from state and federal aid.

(4) On April 4, 1921, the date that the Mecklenburg highway commission assumed jurisdiction and control over the public roads and highways of Mecklenburg county, under the act creating said commission, there remained uncompleted, under project No. 55, work amounting to $42,703.64, which was thereafter completed by the contractor, to whom the contract for said project had been previously let by the State Highway Commission, the board of commissioners of Mecklenburg county having paid the said Highway Commission one-half the cost of work done under said project, prior to the said 4th day of April, 1921.

(5) Under the provisions of chapter 2, Public Laws of 1921, the highway, of which project No. 55 is a part, was designated and laid out as a state highway, and the control and jurisdiction over said road was vested by said act in the State Highway Commission.

[1] Upon these, the facts chiefly relevant, the question submitted for decision is whether the $42,703.64, now due the State Highway Commission by the county of Mecklenburg for work done on project No. 55, since April 4, 1921, shall be paid by the Mecklenburg highway commission or by the board of commissioners of said county?

It will be observed that the Mecklenburg highway commission has succeeded to all the powers and duties heretofore performed by the board of commissioners or other officials of Mecklenburg county, with respect to any and all kinds of work connected with the public roads of the county. It is also provided that all moneys of the county available for road purposes "whether raised by taxation, bond issues, or otherwise," shall be placed to the credit of the Mecklenburg highway commission. And in section 14 of the act above mentioned, it is further provided:

"The board of county commissioners shall also turn over to the county treasurer, to be applied to road improvement and construction, as much of the general county funds as may not be needed for other purposes."

From the foregoing, it would seem that the clear intent of the Legislature was to vest all local authority over the roads of the county in the Mecklenburg highway commission and to require the county commissioners to place all funds available for such purpose to the credit of said commission. Hence we think it is but meet and in keeping with the true intent and spirit of the law to declare that the Mecklenburg highway commission should assume the balance of the obligation accruing for work done on project No. 55, after April 4, 1921.

[2] We are also asked to say out of what particular fund this item should be paid. As now advised, we think this is a matter of indifference; but, there being no funds in hand except those derived from the sale of bonds, we see no reason why it should not be paid from these funds.

Reversed.

MILLS v. TABOR et al. (No. 590.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 21, 1921.)

1. Husband and wife \S 199—Purchaser from wife under defective deed held full equitable owner.

Although a married woman's deed is defective for want of her husband's written consent, where she has received a cash consideration and has accepted the balance of the purchase money after she has become a widow, the grantee becomes the equitable owner of the property.

2. Execution \S 268—Title of execution purchaser held superior to prior deed subsequently recorded.

Where an equitable owner of property purchased from a married woman executed a deed to a third person which was not registered until after a judgment against the equitable owner was obtained, the title of the execution purchaser of such judgment was superior to the deed from the execution debtor to his grantee.

3. Judgment \S 788(1) — Purchase-money mortgage to judgment debtor held not to affect lien of judgment.

Where a judgment debtor prior to the judgment executed a conveyance of the property which was not recorded until after execution sale, the fact that the grantee executed a mortgage back to secure the balance of the purchase price had no effect as against the judgment notwithstanding it was registered prior thereto, the deed of the judgment debtor not being registered until after the judgment was docketed, and such mortgage may be removed as a cloud on the title of the execution purchaser.

4. Estoppel \S 29(1)—Parties claiming under common source cannot contest his title.

In a suit to remove cloud from title, where plaintiff claimed under a judgment by virtue of an execution, and defendant claimed under mortgage by the judgment debtor's grantee, both parties deriving their title from a common source, neither could contest the title conveyed to such common source.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cherokee County; Harding, Judge.

Action by C. C. Mills against W. M. Tabor and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Hattie Palmer, who was defectively registered as a free trader, conveyed without the joinder of her husband the lands in dispute to W. M. Tabor by deed dated December 28, 1916, and registered two days thereafter, in consideration of $2,500, of which Tabor paid $1,000 in cash and executed three notes of $500 each for the balance payable one, two, and three years after date and secured by a mortgage deed on the land.

Tabor and wife by deed of January 23, 1918, conveyed said lands to Allen Ashe for the consideration of $2,600, of which $200 was paid in cash, and Ashe assumed the debt of $1,500 to Mrs. Palmer and gave Tabor a mortgage deed for the balance, $900. The mortgage deed to Tabor was registered April 1, 1919, but the deed from Tabor to Ashe was not registered until December 24, 1919.

At November term, 1919, of Cherokee, which began November 3, 1919, the plaintiff, Mills, obtained a judgment against W. M. Tabor for $2,032.32 which was duly docketed and indexed. Tabor's homestead was allotted. The lands described in the complaint were sold under execution and purchased for Mills.

Hattie Palmer's husband died October 21, 1918. After his death, while a widow, she accepted payment of the two last notes from Allen Ashe, who had paid the first of the three notes to Mrs. Palmer before her husband's death.

On December 28, 1920, after the sale under execution and after Mills had sued Ashe for possession, Mrs. Palmer executed to Ashe a deed for said lands. Mills paid Ashe back the $1,500 he had paid Mrs. Palmer, and Mills was by a consent judgment decreed owner of the land. Tatham owns the note from Ashe to Tabor for $900, and this action is brought to have the mortgage from Ashe to Tabor removed as a cloud upon Mills' title. Upon the agreed state of facts as above, the court entered judgment that the mortgage from Allen Ashe to the defendant W. M. Tabor was a valid lien upon the property described in the complaint to secure a note of $900, and that the defendants should recover of the plaintiff their costs of the action. Appeal by plaintiff.

Dillard & Hill, of Murphy, for appellant.
J. N. Moody, of Murphy, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. The deed from Hattie Palmer to A. M. Tabor dated December 28, 1916, was defective in that her husband did not give his written assent to the conveyance, but Tabor paid her $1,000 in cash and executed his three notes for $500, which were secured by his mortgage on the land back to Mrs. Palmer. One of these notes was paid to her during her husband's life, and the balance of the purchase money was paid to her after she had become a widow by Allen Ashe, who was the grantee in a deed from Tabor. Mills paid Ashe back the $1,500 he had paid Mrs. Palmer, and by a consent judgment to which Mills, Ashe, and Mrs. Palmer were parties Mills has been declared the owner of said lands.

This controversy is over the question whether the $900 note secured by the mortgage from Ashe to Tabor, which was registered prior to the date of the sale under execution in favor of Mills, is a lien upon the title of Mills which accrued by purchase under the execution against Tabor under a judgment against Tabor docketed prior to the registration of Tabor's deed to Ashe.

[1, 2] It is true that the deed to Tabor by Mrs. Palmer was defective for want of the written consent of her husband, but, in addition to $1,000 cash paid to her by Tabor and by the acceptance by her after she became a widow of the balance of the purchase money, he became the full equitable owner of the property. Sills v. Bethea, 178 N. C. 315, 100 S. E. 593. She could not assert any title against him, and certainly no one else could, and under the execution sale against Tabor the purchaser, Mills, stood in the shoes of Tabor and acquired his interest in the land except as against his grantee, Ashe. But Ashe's title by virtue of Tabor's deed is inferior to the lien of Mills' judgment, which was docketed first. Tabor executed a deed to Ashe January 23, 1918, but it was not registered till December 24, 1919, and in the meantime the judgment by Mills against Tabor was obtained at November term, 1919 (which began on November 3), and under it the purchaser Mills has title which is good against the deed for the same interest from Tabor to Ashe which was not registered till after the lien of the judgment. Mills' title therefore is superior to the deed from Tabor to Ashe.

[3] It is true that Ashe executed back a mortgage on this property to Tabor for $900 to secure the balance of the purchase $900, but that, though registered April 1, 1919, could have no effect as against the lien of Mills' judgment, as the deed from Tabor to Ashe for the land was not registered till after Mills' judgment was docketed. We are therefore of the opinion that by the payment of the purchase money and the acceptance of the balance thereof after Mrs. Palmer became a widow the equitable title was vested in Tabor. By virtue of the judgment against Tabor in favor of Mills and his purchase of the land under the execution he acquired the interest of Tabor prior to the conveyance of the same interest by Tabor to Ashe, which was not recorded till after the lien of the judgment, and hence the $900 mortgage executed by Ashe back to Tabor to secure the note assigned to the defendant Tatham is a cloud upon the title which the plaintiff is entitled to have removed. The mortgage secured by this note was registered prior to the lien of the judgment, but at that time, the conveyance from Tabor to Ashe not being recorded, such mortgage conveyed no interest as against the judgment of Mills.

[4] Both the plaintiff and the defendants derive their title from Tabor, and they cannot contest the title conveyed to him by Hattie Palmer. The plaintiff claims under a judgment by virtue of an execution issued on which the plaintiff, Mills, acquired the sheriff's deed. The assignee, John A. Tatham, holds under a mortgage executed by Ashe back to Tabor, and has no claim except by virtue of the deed from Tabor to Ashe, and, that not having been recorded till after date of the judgment obtained by Mills, Mills is entitled to a decree confirming his title, and to remove the defendant's claim as a cloud upon plaintiff's title.

Both the plaintiff and the defendants claim under Tabor and the title which has accrued to him from Mrs. Palmer, as above stated. The sole controversy is whether the plaintiff has acquired by judgment and execution the interest of Tabor in the land by a lien prior to the interest which Ashe acquired by Tabor's deed which was not registered till after the lien of the docketed judgment under which Mills purchased. The mortgage securing the note executed by Ashe to Tabor and assigned by him to Tatham, though the mortgage was registered prior to the judgment, is invalid as against the lien of the judgment, since the mortgage had nothing upon which to rest.

Though Tabor and those claiming under him would be estopped as to Ashe by his warranty deed, this does not affect the lien acquired under the judgment against Tabor which was docketed before his deed to Ashe was registered. Whatever the title or interest of Tabor in the land, his junior registered conveyance thereof is inferior to title acquired by sale under execution upon the prior docketed judgment.

The plaintiff is entitled to a decree removing the claim of the defendant as a cloud upon his title.

Reversed.

In an action for injuries to a pedestrian struck by train after walking around another train obstructing passage over a path crossing track, where there was evidence that no signal was given or whistle blown, the question of railroad's negligence held for the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Iredell County; Bryson, Judge.

Action by G. C. Lapish against the Director General of Railroads and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This is an action for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff when struck by the engine of the Southern Railroad Company, December 24, 1919, while that company was being operated by the Director General of Railroads.

The plaintiff had left the plant of the Statesville Furniture Company in Statesville about 4:30 p. m. that day on his way to his home in the city, and was going along a path which crossed the railroad track near the station. This path was used by the public generally, there being evidence that about 200 people crossed the track at that point on that afternoon. The railroad track from Charlotte at that point makes a very short curve. The plaintiff, 66 years of age, stepped on the track and walked along the same for a short distance to go around the train which obstructed his crossing, when he was struck from behind by the engine, knocking him from the path, and received serious bodily injury.

There was motion for judgment as of nonsuit, which was overruled, and at the close of the defendant's evidence this motion was renewed and again refused. This is the sole exception presented by the appeal.

L. O. Caldwell, of Statesville, for appellants.

John A. Scott, Jr., and Dorman Thompson, both of Statesville, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. [1] On a motion of nonsuit in an action for negligence contributory negligence, being a matter of defense, is not to be considered. Whitesides v. Railroad, 128 N. C. 229, 38 S. E. 878, which has been cited as authority that on evidence such as this the case should be submitted to the jury; Holman v. Railroad, 159 N. C. 46, 74 S. E. 577; Shepherd v. Railroad, 163 N. C. 521, 79 S. E. 968.

[2] According to the plaintiff's testimony, he was seeking to cross the railroad track on his way home from his place of work. He turned up the track to get around a work train on the main or Asheville track, which was blocking his passage. He says he looked around and saw no train on the other or Charlotte track, and stepped upon that as he saw no train on it, and heard no signal or blow; that while on the track for the purpose of going around the standing train he was struck from behind by an approaching train on the other track from Charlotte, which came around a sharp curve without blowing the whistle or giving other warning, and which was 20 minutes late, and was knocked unconscious. His legs were crippled, and one leg cut half in two; his collar bone was broken, his head was injured and he was in the hospital several weeks. Witness further stated that he helped build the Statesville Furniture Factory 20 years ago, and has worked there ever since it was built; these railroad tracks were there then and there was a street across the track, but vehicles do not cross it now, it being used only by pedestrians. He says further that in going around the train upon the other track he looked back in the direction from which this Charlotte train came, and stepped up near the track; that if the train had blown he would have heard it.

The above in brief is the substance of the testimony. The plaintiff says there was no signal given or whistle blown. The engineer says there was; and the jury found in accordance with the plaintiff's testimony. The court at the close of all the evidence denied the motion for a nonsuit. This was simply a question of fact, and, as the evidence on such a state of facts, tending to show contributory negligence, cannot be considered on such motion, the judgment refusing the motion to nonsuit must be affirmed.

WALKER, J. (concurring). This case does not present the question so often decided by this court as to the liability of a railroad company for an injury to a trespasser walking on its tracks when its engineer has the right to suppose that he will leave the track even up to the last moment, when it is too late to save him from injury; the latter, if it occurs, being imputed to his own negligence. Here the plaintiff was walking along the public road, and was diverted from his course because his way was blocked by one of defendant's trains. He therefore went around the train to get into the street or road again, and had to use the track of defendant in doing so, having looked and listened for trains before entering upon the track and seeing none. The defendant's engine approached him suddenly, and without warning, and under circumstances and surroundings requiring notice of its approach to be given. He was not, therefore, a mere trespasser or licensee, but was acting in the exercise of his legal right, and his conduct being induced by the wrongful act of the defendant. The doctrine as to trespassers, or licensees, on railroad tracks is too well settled to be disturbed, and this decision, as I understand, is not intended to do so, as appears from the court's opinion. See Neal v. R. R. Co., 126 N. C. 634, 36 S. E. 117, 49 L. R. A. 684; s. c., 128 N. C. 143, 38 S. E. 474; McAdoo v. R. R. Co., 105 N. C. 140, 11 S. E. 316; High v. R. R. Co., 112 N. C. 385, 17 S. E. 79; Ward v. R. R. Co. 161 N. C. 179, 76 S. E. 717. These, and many other cases, have established this doctrine firmly and placed it beyond any possibility of controversy.

The case was virtually resolved into an issue of fact, both as to negligence and contributory negligence, there being evidence as to both questions. The charge of the court was free from any substantial error, and there is no ground for a reversal. The jury found both issues in favor of the plaintiff, and his right to the judgment has not been successfully assailed.

J. E. BURLERSON MICA CO. et al. v. SOUTHERN EXPRESS CO. et al. (No. 513.)

1. Evidence \S 368(3)—Allegation in affidavit to require defendant to file papers that they were necessary to the trial insufficient.

In an affidavit to require defendant to produce certain papers at the trial as provided in C. S. \S 1823 and 1824, an allegation that plaintiff had filed certain papers with and had written certain letters to defendants, and that the papers filed with defendants were necessary in the trial of the action, is insufficient, as being a conclusion, and not alleging the facts showing the materiality and necessity of the papers.

2. Evidence \S 368(8)—Order that defendant file with clerk papers for use in trial within 30 days prior to the next term of court held defective.

Under C. S. \S 1824, giving the court power on motion to require the production of books or papers in the possession of parties to a suit and giving power to render judgment by default for failure to comply with the order, an order of court that the party shall file with the clerk papers for use in a trial within 30 days prior to the next term of court is defective as exceeding the authority conferred, which is only to secure the presentation of the papers at the time of trial or for an inspection before trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mitchell County; Ray, Judge.

Action by the J. E. Burlerston Mica Company and others against the Southern Express Company and another. From judgment for plaintiff by default, defendant American Railway Express Company appeals. Reversed.

Summons was issued against both defendants on November 22, 1919. The Southern Express Company entered a special appearance and moved to dismiss the action as to it on the ground that process had not been served. There was an order for an alias summons, and an alias writ of attachment against the stock held by the Southern Express Company in the American Railway Express Company. Plaintiffs alleged that mica of the value of $1,290, the property of the Mica Company, was delivered to the Southern Express Company for transportation from Thomaston, Ga., to J. E. Burlerston at Spruce Pine, Mitchell county, that the Southern Express Company put the mica in care of the American Railway Express Company for transportation, and that the defendants negligently failed to transport and deliver it. Answer was filed by American Railway Express Company. J. E. Burlerston made this affidavit:

"J. E. Burlerston, first being duly sworn, says: That in the above-entitled action the plaintiff filed with the defendants the shipping receipt and other papers at the time that he filed his claim herein for loss of mica; that he wrote defendants numbers of letters asking that his shipment be traced before he filed his said claim; that said papers filed with the defendants are necessary in the trial of this action, and this affiant asks that the defendant be required to file all papers and correspondence connected with said case with the clerk of the Superior Court of Mitchell county, so that the plaintiff may have access to same, in the trial of this cause."

Thereupon Judge McElroy made the following order:

"Upon affidavit filed it is ordered by the court that the defendants file with the clerk of the Superior Court of Mitchell county within 30 days prior to the next term of this court all papers filed by the plaintiff with either defendant in connection with this case, including the shipping receipt and all other papers and other correspondence connected with said case."

While the case was in progress and Erastus Greene was testifying for the plaintiff he was asked concerning the claim filed by plaintiffs with defendants. Upon defendants' objection, plaintiffs' counsel called to the court's attention the order of Judge McElroy and failure of defendants to comply with the order. The court found the facts, among which are the following: The defendants had neither complied with Judge McElroy's order nor explained their failure to do so; plaintiffs had filed their claim with the agent in charge of the express office at Spruce Pine, and the papers in question were material to the controversy and should have been produced; that counsel for defendants had objected to the introduction of parol evidence; and that defendants had been guilty of a contemptuous disregard of the order. The court rendered the following judgment:

"The above-entitled action coming on for hearing and being heard, and it appearing to the court that the defendant Southern Express Company is a corporation, and prior to the 1st day of July, 1918, it had property in the state of North Carolina and was engaged in carrying on business in said state, and that while so engaged it incurred liabilities under its contracts entered into with the citizens of the state of North Carolina and with the plaintiffs herein, and it further appearing to the court that it now has no officer or other agent in this state upon whom process might be served as provided by law, and that it has failed to comply with section No. 1137 of the Consolidated Statutes of North Carolina and maintain such process agent in said state, and it further appearing that summons has been duly issued against said defendant Southern Express Company in this action, and that the same was duly served upon J. Bryan Grimes, Secretary of State, as provided by said statute and that said defendant is now before the court by reason of such service, and it further appearing that a complaint has been filed by the plaintiffs against the said Southern Express Company, and that said defendant has filed no answer thereto, and it further appearing that at July term, 1920, of this court that upon application of the plaintiffs herein an order was entered commanding the defendant American Railway Express Company to produce and file in this court the shipping receipt and all other papers and correspondence filed with said defendant American Railway Express Company, including the claim filed by plaintiffs for damages by reason of the loss of the mica the shipment of which is in controversy herein, together with all papers and correspondence in connection therewith, and it further appearing to the court that the said claim and shipping receipt and other papers and correspondence so filed with the defendant American Railway Express Company contain evidence pertinent on the trial of this cause, and it further appearing to the court that the said defendant, in disregard and contempt of said order so entered in this cause, has failed to satisfactorily account for its failure to produce the same or make any answer whatsoever to the said order, it is, upon motion of Chas. E. Greene and S. J. Black, counsel for plaintiffs, considered ordered and adjudged by the court that the plaintiffs herein recover of the defendant American Railway Express Company the sum of $1,290, with interest on said sum from the 5th day of July, 1918, until paid, with the costs of this action to be taxed by the clerk of this court. It is further considered, ordered, and adjudged that judgment by default be, and the same is hereby entered against the defendant the Southern Express Company."

Only the American Railway Express Company excepted and appealed.

Martin, Rollins & Wright, of Asheville, for appellant.

Charles E. Greene, of Bakersville, and S. J. Ervin, and S. J. Ervin, Jr., both of Morganton, for appellees.

ADAMS, J. The appellant's fourteenth exception impeaches the validity of Judge McElroy's order, and incidentally of the affidavit on which it is based. The application for the order rests on the following sections of Consolidated Statutes:

"The court before which an action is pending, or a judge thereof, may, in their discretion, and upon due notice, order either party to give to the other, within a specified time, an inspection and copy, or permission to take a copy, of any books, papers, and documents in his possession or under his control, containing evidence relating to the merits of the action or the defense therein. If compliance with the order be refused, the court, on motion, may exclude the paper from being given in evidence, or punish the party refusing or both." C. S. § 1823.

"The courts have full power, on motion and due notice thereof given, to require the parties to produce books or writings in their possession or control which contain evidence pertinent to the issue, and if a plaintiff shall fail to comply with such order, and shall not satisfactorily account for his failure, the court, on motion, may give the like judgment for the defendant, as in cases of nonsuit; and if a defendant shall fail to comply with such order, and shall not satisfactorily account for his failure, the court, on motion as aforesaid, may give judgment against him by default." C. S. § 1824.

[1] In our opinion, the affidavit is insufficient. The plaintiff Burleson alleged that he had filed certain papers with, and had written certain letters to, the defendants, and that the papers filed with the defendants were necessary in the trial of the action. The latter allegation is only an inference of law. In Evans v. Railroad, 167 N. C. 416, 83 S. E. 617, Justice Brown said:

"A mere statement that an examination is material and necessary is not sufficient. This is nothing more than the statement of the applicant's opinion. The facts showing the materiality and necessity must be stated positively, and not argumentatively or inferentially."

See 14 Cyc. 346.

The application should also show the necessity for the inspection or production, and it is a generally accepted principle that the affiant's bare conclusion of law is not sufficient for this purpose. 18 C. J. 1124. Non constat that the plaintiffs did not have carbon copies of the letters and the other papers filed with the defendant, or such knowledge of their contents as would dispense with the necessity of inspection.

[2] We regard the order also as fatally defective. The plaintiffs alleged that the papers were necessary in the trial of the action; but the order required the defendants to file them with the clerk "within 30 days prior to the next term of this court." If the papers were to be used in the trial and no inspection was necessary, the order should have required their production when the case was reached on the docket; if inspection before the trial was desired, such definite time and place as the law contemplates should have been designated for that purpose. In McGibboney v. Mills, 35 N. C. 163, this court affirmed an order of the lower court requiring the plaintiff to file the bond sued on with the clerk for inspection "from the 1st day of January, 1852, to the 15th of January, 1852"; but in Mills v. Lumber Co., 139 N. C. 524, 52 S. E. 200 it was held in an opinion by the Chief Justice that an order to produce and deposit certain papers in the office of the clerk was unauthorized. The Chief Justice very aptly said:

"There is nothing in the statute which authorizes an order that the respondent be required to deposit the papers. In practice, this might prove oppressive and detrimental. The papers and books might be necessary in the conduct of the plaintiff's business, and there is no guaranty of their safety when so deposited. All that the statute authorizes is an order that the papers be produced with sufficient opportunity to the other side to inspect the same and take a copy. Sheek v. Sain, 127 N. C. 272."

In Corpus Juris it is stated that in some jurisdictions a party cannot be required to deposit his papers in the clerk's office, and North Carolina is classed among this number. 18 C. J. 1128. In the case at bar the order required that the papers be taken from the defendants before the term of court and deposited or filed with the clerk for an indefinite length of time upon the allegation that they were necessary in the trial. There was no suggestion that it was necessary to impound the papers to secure them against loss or to prevent the perpetration of a fraud.

In these circumstances the presiding judge evidently misinterpreted the statutes upon which the order was made to rest, and inadvertently exceeded the authority conferred when, during the examination of a witness, he undertook of his own motion to withdraw the issues from the jury, find the facts from the record, and render judgment as by default against the defendant while the controverted matters were still pending and unsettled.

For these reasons it becomes unnecessary to consider the other questions discussed in the briefs. We hold, then, that the judgment against the American Railway Express Company must be reversed, and that the matters in controversy must be determined as provided by law.

Reversed.

ROBINSON et al. v. BOARD OF COM'RS OF BRUNSWICK COUNTY. (No. 293.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 14, 1921.)

1. Schools and school districts ~~§ 111~~—Issuance of building bonds and levy of taxes to pay the same held properly enjoined at suit of taxpayers.

Issuance of bonds and levy of taxes to pay the same for the purpose of building in a high school district established by Priv. Laws 1921, c. 251, were properly enjoined at suit of taxpayers, where it appears that property not in the district is made taxable, and property in a portion of the district is exempted.

2. Statutes ~~§ 98(1)~~—Act to establish a school district a local or special act prohibited by Constitution.

An act of the Legislature, undertaking to establish a school district and to establish the lines and boundaries thereof, is a local or special act, prohibited by Const. art. 2, § 29.

Appeal from Superior Court, Brunswick County; Connor, Judge.

Suit by D. E. Robinson and others against Board of Commissioners of Brunswick County for an injunction. From a decree in favor of plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The plaintiffs are residents and taxpayers of Brunswick, and the defendants are the board of county commissioners of said county.

Chapter 251, Private Laws 1921, entitled "an act to establish a high school district and issue bonds with which to build and equip high school buildings and to provide for the payment of said bonds and the maintenance and government of said school," was ratified March 8, 1921.

The court found as facts that at a special meeting of the board of education of that county held prior to February 26, 1921, said board by resolutions established the "supply high school district" and lines and boundaries thereof, being identical with the boundaries of the high school district established in the above act of the General Assembly; that said high school district was established by said board of education in expectation of the passage of said bill, and it was expressly provided in said resolutions of the board that said district was established upon condition that said bill was passed, and that the bonds and taxes provided there should be authorized by the voters in said district at the election to be provided in said bill; and that in pursuance of said act an election was held in said district and a majority of voters therein voted for the bond issue and for the tax authorized by said act. It is further found by the court that the board of county commissioners of Brunswick are now about to issue the bonds and levy the taxes provided for in the aforesaid act and will do so unless restrained and enjoined in this action. It is provided in aforesaid act:

"Said bonds shall be prepared and issued by order of the board of county commissioners of Brunswick for and in behalf of supply high school district."

It is also found as a fact by the court that said supply high school district as established by the resolutions of the board of education and by the aforesaid act of the General Assembly includes a portion of two townships, Lockwood's Folly and Smithville, in said county. It is also provided in said act:

"If at said election a majority of the qualified electors shall vote for high school bonds the said board of county commissioners of Brunswick shall levy annually thereafter a special tax upon all taxable property in said township for the special purpose of paying the principal and interest of all bonds issued under this act."

And it is further provided therein:

"In addition to the tax levied to meet the payment of the principal and interest of said bonds, the board of county commissioners of Brunswick are hereby authorized to levy a special tax upon the taxable property in said high school district for the purpose of defraying the expenses of said high school provided by this act."

It is also found by the court that the high school buildings to be erected with the proceeds of said bonds are to be erected "in Lockwood's Folly township," and all the taxable property in said township is made subject to the tax to be levied for the payment of said bonds and interest on the same: that the district for which said bonds are to be issued does not include all of said township, so much of said township as lies within the corporate limits of the town of Shallotte being expressly excluded from the said district, which further includes a portion of Smithville township, the taxable property of which is not made subject to a tax to be levied for the payment of said bonds.

Upon the foregoing facts, the court held that the bonds the defendants are about to issue and to levy the tax for should be enjoined, and the defendants appealed.

Smith & Ruark, for appellants.

Robert W. Davis, of Southport, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. [1] The proceeds of the bonds in question are to be used for the purpose of erecting a high school building in Lockwood's Folly township, but the act provides that said bonds shall be issued "for and in behalf of supply high school district" and said district as defined in the act, and in the resolutions of the board of education of Brunswick county does not include all of said Lockwood's Folly township, and does include a portion of Smithville township, while it is provided that the tax is to be levied for the payment of said bonds "on all the taxable property in said township," thus making the property within the corporate limits of the town of Shallotte subject to the tax, though it is expressly excepted from said district, for which said bonds are to be issued, whereas the act expressly excepts from said district so much of said township as lies in said corporate limits, and further provides that said bonds shall be issued for and in behalf of so much of Smithville township as is included in said district, whereas the property situated in Smithville township is not made subject to the tax to be levied for the payment of said bonds. His honor upon the above facts properly enjoined the defendants from issuing, selling, or disposing of the bonds, and from levying any tax or taxes for the payment thereof. Commissioners v. State Treasurer, 174 N. C. 141, 93 S. E. 482, 2 A. L. R. 726.

[2] Further, the act is objectionable and invalid because it undertakes to establish a school district, and, being a local or special act, it is prohibited under the express provisions of article 2, section 29, of the Constitution. Trustees v. Trust Co., 181 N. C. 306, 107 S. E. 130, in which Hoke, J., speaking for a unanimous court, construing a somewhat similar act (but without the discrepancies pointed out in this statute), wherein the Legislature attempted to create a graded school district in Robeson county, defining its limits by metes and bounds and authorizing a vote to issue bonds for buildings and equipments held that—

"A statute which lays off or defines by boundary a certain territory as a graded school district within a county, and provides for an issue of bonds upon the approval of the voters therein, for the necessary buildings and maintenance, comes within the recent amendment to our Constitution forbidding the General Assembly from enacting any local or special acts to establish or change the lines of school districts making them void, and requiring legislation of this character must be by general provisions of law. Constitution, art. II, sec. 29."

The opinion in that case was filed May 4, 1921, receiving the approval of a unanimous court, and invalidates the act now before us. The discrepancies in this act pointed out in the early part of this opinion may have been due to the fact that it was ratified on the eve of the adjournment of the General Assembly March 8, 1921, one of the very last private acts ratified by the General Assembly at that session, and doubtless it did not receive the close scrutiny it should have had. Affirmed.

RUCKER v. SANDERS. (No. 398.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 14, 1921.)

1. Contracts \Leftrightarrow 26—Offer made by mail may be accepted by mail.

An offer made by mail carries with it an implied invitation, nothing else appearing, to accept or reject it by mail.

2. Contracts \Leftrightarrow 20—Offeree must accept within reasonable time.

Where no time limit is fixed, an offeree must accept within a reasonable time, which means that he should have a reasonable time within which to accept, in the absence of any revocation by the offeror.

3. Corporations \Leftrightarrow 116—Unconditional acceptance of offer to sell stock creates a mutual executory contract.

Where an offer to sell stock was accepted absolutely without condition, it resulted in an executory contract, with mutuality of obligation and remedy.

An acceptance, to be effectual, must be identical with the offer and unconditional.

5. Corporations \Leftrightarrow 116—Suggestion in a letter of acceptance of offer to sell stock held not an attempt to vary the terms of the offer.

A suggestion or direction, in a letter of acceptance of an offer to sell stock, to draw a draft on the offeree for the purchase price, attach the stock certificates to it, and send it to a certain bank for collection, did not amount to an attempt to vary the terms of the offer to sell, and will not defeat an action for breach of contract.

Clark, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Webb, Judge.

Action by P. C. Rucker against W. M. Sanders. From judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Civil action to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract growing out of the following negotiations:

On Wednesday, March 24, 1920, the plaintiff who resides in Greensboro, N. C., addressed a letter of inquiry to the defendant, who lives at Smithfield, N. C., asking what was the lowest price he would take for his stock in the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company. On Friday, the 26th, the defendant answered by mail, saying that he owned 50 shares of said stock which he would sell for $10,000. On Saturday, March 27th, the plaintiff wrote the defendant as follows:

"Regarding your fifty shares of Jefferson Standard stock that you offer at $10,000.00, while this is the highest price I have heard of, I will accept it. Just draw on me here at Greensboro with your Jefferson Standard stock attached to the draft, and I will honor same. Please advise me that you have drawn, so I will be looking out for the draft."

The following Monday, March 29th, the defendant replied, saying that he had disposed of his stock; whereupon, on March 30th, the plaintiff wired the defendant, insisting that the stock be delivered in accordance with his offer.

There was a judgment of nonsuit upon the ground that no enforceable contract had been shown, and from this ruling the plaintiff appealed.

Alfred S. Wyllie and J. S. Duncan, both of Greensboro, for appellant.

King, Sapp & King, of Greensboro, for appellee.

STACY, J. [1] We think the defendant's motion for judgment as of nonsuit should have been denied. The offer to sell the 50 shares of stock in question for $10,000 was made by mail which carried with it an implied invitation, nothing else appearing, to accept or reject the offer in like manner—that is, by mail. Patrick v. Bowman, 149 U. S. 411, 13 Sup. Ct. 811, 866, 37 L. Ed. 790; 13 C. J. 300; 6 R. C. L. 611.

[2] Where no time limit is fixed, it is generally understood that the offeree must accept within a reasonable time; and we think this necessarily means that he should have a reasonable time within which to accept, in the absence of any revocation by the offeror. Minn. & St. L. R. Co. v. Columbus Rolling Mill Co., 119 U. S. 149, 7 Sup. Ct. 168, 30 L. Ed. 376; Lucas v. Western Union Tel. Co., 181 Iowa, 669, 109 N. W. 191, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.), 1016, and note; Litz v. Goosling, 93 Ky. 185, 19 S. W. 527, 21 L. R. A. 127, and note. However, this is not one of the mooted questions before us, as the plaintiff's letter of acceptance was forwarded by return mail, and defendant admits that he received it before selling his stock to another.

[3, 4] There is no controversy or difference of opinion between the parties as to the general rules of law governing the subject of contracts by correspondence; but the defendant contends that the plaintiff's letter of March 27th was not an unconditional and unqualified acceptance of his offer. He says the terms were varied by the direction to draw draft with stock attached, and that such was a condition precedent to plaintiff's acceptance. We think this construction is rather too technical and might properly be characterized as "sticking in the bark." It is quite certain that, if the plaintiff were seeking to avoid his agreement on this ground, we would be disposed to hold against him. And, if the contract be binding as to one of the parties, it is binding as to both. The defendant's offer was accepted absolutely, without condition, and this resulted in an executory contract, with mutuality of obligation and remedy. Howell v. Pate, 181 N. C. 117, 106 S. E. 454, and cases there cited.

The difficulty in the instant case arises out of the failure of the parties to distinguish between a condition which goes to the making of the contract and a suggestion relating only to its ultimate performance or execution. Of course, to consummate any kind of a contract, there must be a meeting of the minds upon a given subject. An unaccepted offer is not a contract; and, as stated in a number of cases, an acceptance to be effectual must be identical with the offer and unconditional. 13 C. J. 281. But, in order for this subsequently intended direction or suggestion to invalidate the acceptance, it should amount to a qualification or condition imposed as a part of the acceptance itself. In other words, it must be construed in the case at bar as a qualified acceptance to the effect that "I will accept your offer; provided you attach stock to draft and draw on me here in Greensboro and advise me so that I can be looking out for same." It will be readily conceded, without debate, that if this latter meaning be the reasonable and natural interpretation of plaintiff's letter dated March 27th, then there was no contract, and the defendant's contention, based upon this assumption, is entirely correct. But, on the other hand, if a contrary purpose were intended, as apparently and evidently it was, and the parties so understood it, we must give effect to the most essential and controlling element of all executory contracts, to wit, the real understanding and intention of the parties. The suggestion or direction made by plaintiff to draw draft with stock attached was not an unusual or unexpected method by which the parties might reasonably have contemplated carrying out the contract; and this lends color to the conclusion that a compliance with the plaintiff's wish, hope, or expressed request, "Just draw on me here with stock attached," was not intended as a condition precedent to his acceptance of the defendant's offer. It is further conceded that the result would have been otherwise had this suggestion not been accompanied by a declaration of unqualified and unconditional acceptance. 39 Cyc. 1189, and cases cited in note.

There is no effort to circumvent or deny the well-settled principle that an offer must be accepted in its exact terms in order that a contract should arise therefrom, and any attempt to impose new conditions or terms in the acceptance, however slight, will ordinarily deprive it of any efficacy. Krentzer v. Lynch, 122 Wis. 474, 100 N. W. 887.

[5] But where the letter of acceptance contains a mere suggestion or requests that payment be made in a certain way, and such request is not in the form of a condition attached to the acceptance, it does not amount to an attempt to vary the terms of the offer to sell, and will not defeat an action in proper instances for specific performance, or one for a breach of the contract. Curtis Land Co. v. Interior Land Co., 137 Wis. 341, 118 N. W. 853, 129 Am. St. Rep. 1068; Turner v. McCormick, 56 W. Va. 161, 49 S. E. 28, 67 L. R. A. 853, 107 Am. St. Rep. 904.

In the last-cited case the Supreme Court of West Virginia makes the following general observations pertinent to the subject now in hand:

"If a man says, 'I accept your offer,' that makes a contract. It assents to all the terms of the offer. What more is necessary? There is a complete 'aggregatio mentium.' The acceptance conforms to the offer in every particular. How can a mere request, relating, not to the making of the contract, but to its performance, be deemed to change it? Would the acceptor be permitted to excuse himself from performance on the ground of such request? No precedent of that kind has been found. They are all cases in which the proposer, desiring to escape from the consequences of his offer, because somebody else has proposed a higher price than the first asked, seeks to repudiate the transaction and sell to the other party. Property rights are sacred and should be well guarded by the law, but, when a man has deliberately made a fair contract of sale, he ought not to be permitted to avoid it on some flimsy pretext, in order to avail himself of a better bargain. Time and place of payment, when not mentioned in an accepted offer, are fixed by law, and are matters of performance, carrying out the contract, a thing wholly distinct and separate from the making of the agreement. If, contemporaneously with, or subsequent to the making of the contract, either party suggest, request, or propose a time, place, or mode of performance different from that agreed upon, that does not of itself effect such change, nor does it cause a breach, giving right of action or rescission to the other party. Swiger v. Hayman [48 S. E., 839]."

In Skinner v. Stone, 144 Ark. 353, 11 A. L. R. 808, 222 S. W. 360, a case practically on all fours with the one at bar, the Supreme Court of Arkansas holds (as condensed and stated in the syllabus):

"A suggestion in the acceptance of an offer to sell real estate that the purchaser will take care of draft attached to deed sent to a specified bank does not make that method of payment a condition which will avoid the contract if not accepted, but the purchaser must be given the opportunity to pay in money if the seller requires it."

In the note following this case published in 11 A. L. R. 811, the reporter cites two of our own decisions in support of the same position, to wit, Hughes v. Knott, 138 N. C. 105, 50 S. E. 586, 3 Ann. Cas. 903, and Blalock v. Clark, 137 N. C. 140, 49 S. E. 88.

The defendant relies on the case of Hall v. Jones, 164 N. C. 199, 80 S. E. 228, but we think there is a marked distinction between the facts of that case and those here presented. There the plaintiff, Hall, annexed to his acceptance the condition that the trade be consummated in 15 or 20 days thereafter and asked for a ratification of this change by the defendant, Jones. This was not an acceptance in the terms of the offer, and therefore amounted to a rejection of it. Minn. & St. L. R. Co. v. Columbus Rolling Mill Co., supra; National Bank v. Hall, 101 U. S. 43, 25 L. Ed. 822.

Our attention has been called to a number of cases in other jurisdictions, seemingly in support of a different position, but we think the conclusion we have reached, and stated above, is more in keeping with the real purpose and intention of the parties; and it is universally conceded that this should be the guiding star of construction in every case. See 39 Cyc. 1197, and cases collected in note.

Defendant further contends that the plaintiff should not be permitted to maintain this suit because at the time in question, he was a stockholder and director in the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company, and therefore under the duty of disclosing to the defendant whatever information he may have had regarding the value of this stock.

There is a sharp conflict in the authorities elsewhere over the question as to whether the relations between a director or officer of a corporation, on the one hand, and shareholders, on the other, are not of such a fiduciary relation as to make it the duty of the former to disclose the knowledge which he possesses affecting the value of the stock before purchasing same from a shareholder. An interesting and valuable discussion of this subject will be found in 14A C. J. 128; Shaw v. Cole Mfg. Co., 132 Tenn. 210, 177 S. W. 479, L. R. A. 1916B, 706, and note; Dawson v. Nat. Life Ins. Co., 176 Iowa, 362, 157 N. W. 929, L. R. A. 1916E, 878, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 230; Strong v. Repide, 213 U. S. 419, 29 Sup. Ct. 521, 53 L. Ed. 853. And in our own reports see Bessellew v. Brown, 177 N. C. 85, 97 S. E. 743, 2 A. L. R. 862, and cases there cited, especially McIver v. Hardware Co., 144 N. C. 478, 57 S. E. 169, 119 Am. St. Rep. 970. But we do not think the facts in the instant case call for a decision of this question at the present time. There is no evidence on the record tending to show that the defendant had any less knowledge of the company's business or the value of the stock than the plaintiff. Hence it does not now appear that any harm has resulted from this alleged circumstance, even if it be open to the defendant.

The judgment of nonsuit will be set aside and the cause remanded for a new trial.
Reversed.

CLARK, C. J. (dissenting). On Wednesday March 24, 1920, the plaintiff, who resided at Greensboro, N. C., inquired by letter of the defendant, who resided at Smithfield, N. C., if he had any Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company stock for sale, and, if so, to name his lowest price. On Friday, the 26th, defendant replied by letter that he had 50 shares of said stock, for which he would take $10,000. On Saturday, March 27th, the plaintiff wrote the defendant that he accepted his offer, adding:

"Just draw on me here at Greensboro with your Jefferson Standard stock attached to the draft, and I will honor the same. Please advise me that you have drawn, so I will be looking out for the draft."

On Monday, March 29th, the defendant replied that he had disposed of the stock, whereupon on March 30th, the plaintiff wired the defendant insisting on the delivery of the stock. This constitutes the entire correspondence between the parties with respect to the sale of the stock except the subsequent letter from the defendant of April 21, 1920, which the defendant wrote explaining why he did not accept the plaintiff's offer to draw on him, and had sold the stock in Smithfield for cash:

"April 21, 1920.

"Mr. P. C. Rucker, Greensboro, N. C.—Dear Sir: Of course you understand that I offered you the stock at $10,000.00 cash in Smithfield. You have never offered me any cash for my stock, but proposed that I draw on you through some Greensboro bank. You also stated that I might notify you a few days ahead of draft so that you could arrange with the bank to pay draft in case of your absence. In your first letter, you referred to my stock as insignificant in quantity. In your second letter you stated that my price was above the market and rather more than you had ever known any to bring. You might have wired or called me over the telephone. Your attitude and expressions led me to believe that you were indifferent. I had the opportunity on Saturday and again on Monday following our correspondence to sell the stock for cash, which I did.

"I am very sorry that you are disappointed, but I think that you slept upon your opportunity. You should have called me over phone or wired.

W. M. Sanders."

The court held that the letter of the plaintiff of March 27th was not an unconditional acceptance of the defendant's offer in his letter of March 26th and directed a nonsuit.

The alleged contract being entirely in writing, it was a matter of law for the court to determine whether the correspondence constituted a contract or not. Spragins v. White, 106 N. C. 449, 13 S. E. 171; Festerman v.

Parker, 32 N. C. 474; Young v. Jeffreys, 20 N. C. 357.

"It is familiar learning that, to make a valid sale, the acceptance must be in the terms of the offer. 7 Am. and Eng. 125. No especial formalities are required, but the offer and acceptance must agree. The buyer has no right to attach any conditions, if he proposes to hold the seller upon the original offer." Hall v. Jones, 164 N. C. 189, 80 S. E. 228.

The offer of the defendant in letter of March 26th acknowledging the receipt of the plaintiff's offer to purchase his Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company stock says: "I will take $10,000 for it." The plaintiff's answer on March 27th to this offer says:

"Regarding your 50 shares of Jefferson Standard stock that you offer at $10,000.00, while this is the highest price I have heard of, I will accept it."

If the reply had stopped with these words, the two minds would have met, and the plaintiff would have become the debtor of the defendant, and should by the earliest opportunity have paid his creditor for the $10,000 at his home in Smithfield. But the plaintiff added a material condition to his acceptance by saying:

"Just draw on me here at Greensboro with your Jefferson Standard stock attached to the draft, and I will honor same. Please advise me that you have drawn, so I will be looking out for the draft."

This was not an unconditional acceptance, but a material variance. It is true the seller might have complied with this variance, but it is also true that, his terms not having been accepted, which clearly contemplated the payment in cash to him, in the prompt and regular course of dealings, at Smithfield, he could disregard it and accept payment of cash at his home from another party which was made him after the receipt of said conditional acceptance of the plaintiff.

This matter of offer and acceptance in dealings of this kind are of hourly occurrence throughout the country, and it is of the greatest importance that the settled law that the acceptance of an offer must be unconditional shall be kept unchanged. In 13 C. J. 281, the law is thus fully and admirably stated with copious citations in the notes:

"An acceptance, to be effectual, must be identical with the offer and unconditional. Where a person offers to do a definite thing and another accepts conditionally or introduces a new term into the acceptance, his answer is either a mere expression of willingness to treat or it is a counter proposal, and in neither case is there an agreement. This is true, for example, where an acceptance varies from the offer as to time of performance, place of performance, price, quantity, quality, and other like cases. A promise to give an offer consideration cannot be regarded as an acceptance, nor can a statement that the offeree is prepared to make arrangements on the terms named."

If an offer is accepted as made, the acceptance is not conditional.

It is clear from this correspondence that the offer of the defendant meant that he would take $10,000 cash, payable forthwith, in Smithfield. The reply of the plaintiff varied this by proposing to make payment to the seller in Greensboro, which was not according to the terms of his offer, but a material variance.

If the seller had complied with the proposed condition, he would have made the bank in Greensboro his agent to collect. There would, of course, have been the risk of the check sent by said bank to the seller being protested or lost in the mails, or, if remitted in cash, there would have been danger of theft by the employees of the express company or loss by collision or by train robbers. It is true that these risks might be slight, but they were risks which under the terms of the defendant's offer should have been borne by the plaintiff, whose duty it was to safely convey the $10,000 and pay it over to the seller at his home in Smithfield within the prompt and ordinary course of transmission and payment.

Among the many notes to the above citation from 13 C. J. 281, are the following:

Note 32: "When the offer is to buy a horse and the offeree accepts (if he will come for it), there is no agreement." Fenno v. Weston. 31 Vt. 345; Baker v. Holt, 56 Wis. 100, 14 N. W. 8.

Also:

"Where the offer of property for sale says nothing about the place of payment, and the acceptor specifies that it shall be made at his residence, there is no agreement for the offer entitles the seller to payment at his place of residence."

See 39 Cyc. 1197, with other citations.

That is exactly the case here. The place of payment not being named, it was, of course, to be made at the residence of the seller in Smithfield, and the condition annexed by the buyer that he would make payment in Greensboro and that notice should be given him so that he might be prepared to make payment was a material difference as to which the two minds did not meet, and his honor properly nonsuited the plaintiff upon that ground. There are occasions when the parties are farther apart than Greensboro and Smithfield. For instance, where the offerer might be in New York and the offeree in San Francisco or New Orleans or London. In such cases the variation by reason of the greater distance and delay would emphasize the variation from the proposal of the defendant and the acceptance of the buyer, but the principle of law involved is the same. It is so important and so universally settled that it should not be made uncertain.

In 6 R. C. L. 608, the same uniform ruling of the court is thus summed up:

"There must be no variance between the acceptance and the offer. Accordingly a proposal to accept, or an acceptance, upon terms varying from those offered, is a rejection of the offer, and puts an end to the negotiation unless the party who made the original offer renews it or assents to the modification suggested. The other party, having once rejected the offer, cannot afterwards revive it by attempting an acceptance of it. The acceptance must be unequivocal and unconditional. If to the acceptance of a proposal any condition be affixed by the party to whom the offer is made, or any modification or change in the offer be made or requested, there is a rejection of the offer. Having in effect rejected the offer by its conditional acceptance, the offeree cannot subsequently bind the offeror by an unconditional acceptance. The offeror may, of course, assent to the terms imposed by the offeree, and such assent may be inferred from the fact that the parties conducted business under the conditional acceptance"—citing many cases.

In this instance the defendant upon a fair construction of the correspondence offered to take $10,000 cash for his stock payable to him in Smithfield. The offeree, the plaintiff, varied this by offering to pay in Greensboro to the agent of the offerer. If the seller had assented to this variation, the contract would have been closed, but the seller was not required to take notice of an acceptance which was conditional. Being offered by another payment in cash to himself in Smithfield, he chose to accept and this he had a right to do.

In 39 Cyc. 1197, the same principle is laid down as in the above quotations from C. J. and R. C. L., with numerous citations of authorities. In note 98 thereto it is said:

"If no place is specified for payment, it is implied that it is to be made at the residence of the vendor or his agent, and an acceptance fixing a different place is bad as a variance from the offer"—citing a very long list of cases as a statement of the uniform ruling of the courts.

The acceptance of the offeree in this case in effect proposing to pay in Greensboro, at the risk of the seller for the transmission of the payment to the vendor, was not the unconditional acceptance which the law requires in such transactions.

Benjamin on Sales (7th Ed.) § 39, says:

"The assent must, in order to constitute a valid contract, be mutual, and intended to bind both sides. It must also coexist at the same moment of time. A mere proposal by one man obviously constitutes no bargain of itself. It must be accepted by another, and this acceptance must be unconditional. If a condition be affixed by the party to whom the offer is made, or any modification or change in the offer be requested, this constitutes in law a rejection of the offer and a new proposal, equally ineffectual to complete the contract until assented to by the first proposer."

While in this case the offer of the defendant does not use the word "cash," it is apparent from the correspondence and the course of dealing that this was the intent of the parties. In 1 Page on Contracts, 77, § 46, the author says:

"If the offer of sale does not state the terms of payment, cash payment is implied. Hence an acceptance which attempts to secure even a short period of credit does not make a contract."

Under the ruling in Hall v. Jones, supra, the defendant was not required under the terms of his offer to incur the expense and risks and delay in sending his stock to some bank at Greensboro to be paid at the pleasure and convenience of the plaintiff. It was incumbent upon the plaintiff to accept or reject the offer unconditionally, and, if he accepted, he should have sent the cash, or what would be accepted as cash, by the earliest conveyance to the seller at his home in Smithfield. This proposition is held the settled law as stated in the above and other citations. Among other cases in point fully supporting these contentions of the defendant in this case are Sawyer v. Brossart, 67 Iowa, 678, 25 N. W. 876, 56 Am. Rep. 372; Iron Co. v. Meade, 21 Wis. 474, 94 Am. Dec. 557; Baker v. Holt, 56 Wis. 100, 14 N. W. 8; 1 Parsons on Contracts (6th Ed.) 475; 1 Page on Contracts, 75, citing many cases, among them Gilbert v. Baxter, 71 Iowa, 327, 32 N. W. 364. It is believed there are none to the contrary.

In Iron Co. v. Meade, 21 Wis. 474, 94 Am. Dec. 557, it is said:

"Acceptance" of an offer to sell land, but "fixing a different place for the delivery of the deed" is invalid. "If [the plaintiff] had simply said, 'I accept your proposition,' then there would have been an agreement to sell the land for cash. The payment of the money and the delivery of the deed in such cases are concurrent acts."

The defendant's offer was to accept $10,000 cash in Smithfield. The plaintiff accepted it upon condition that he was to pay to defendant's agent in Greensboro, thus throwing upon the defendant the expense and risk of transmitting the stock, $10,000 worth, to Greensboro and the expense and risk of the transmission back to him of the $10,000 in cash or by check to be turned into cash upon presentation by him to the bank in Smithfield and payment thereof. This was not the offer that was made by the defendant, but a very material variation. It is, on its face, neither an inquiry nor a mere suggestion of the mode of payment, but the statement of the conditions upon which the plaintiff would accept the defendant's offer.

We are not inadvertent that the defense was also set up that the plaintiff was an officer of the company and informed as to the value of its stock, whereas the defendant was not, but this question does not arise upon the nonsuit, and we think the principle of commercial law involved is of sufficient importance to justify the above citation of authorities, which should be conclusive of the correctness of the nonsuit.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 14, 1921.)

1. Criminal law ⚡1069(6)—Appeal from conviction not docketed before called at following term dismissed on motion of Attorney General.

Under Supreme Court rule 17 (66 S. E. vii), requiring that an appeal be dismissed on appellee's motion, if appellant fails to file a transcript seven days before the call of causes from the district from which the appeal comes, at the term following the rendition of the judgment, a motion of the Attorney General to dismiss an appeal from a conviction in a case tried at the September term of the district court should be allowed as a matter of course, where the appeal was not docketed until the fall term of the Supreme Court the following year.

2. Criminal law ⚡1188—Habeas corpus ⚡109—New trial not granted for defective sentence, but case remanded for correct sentence.

A new trial will not be granted merely because of a defective sentence, but the case will be remanded for imposition of a correct sentence, whether it came to the Supreme Court by appeal, on habeas corpus, or by certiorari.

3. Criminal law ⚡995(4)—Sentence to begin on expiration of another sentence not void.

A sentence to imprisonment for 18 months, to begin at the expiration of a previous sentence for another offense if approved by the Supreme Court, but effective immediately if such sentence is reversed or a new trial granted, is not void as being uncertain, indefinite, conditional, alternative, and contingent in respect to the time the judgment should be executed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; Long, Judge.

Aleck Satterwhite was convicted of selling spirituous liquors, and he appeals. Appeal dismissed.

The defendant was convicted and sentenced for selling spirituous liquors, and appealed. Said appeal not having been docketed here at the spring term, as required, the Attorney General moves to dismiss.

Philip C. Cocke, of Asheville, for appellant. James S. Manning, Atty. Gen., and Frank Nash, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

OLARK, C. J. [1] This case was tried at September term, 1920, of Buncombe. Not having been docketed here till this term, the motion of the Attorney General to dismiss should be allowed as a matter of course. At his option, the case might have been docketed and dismissed, under rule 17 (66 S. E. vii), at last term.

[2, 3] The only point, however, raised by the defendant in his brief is:

"Appellant assigns error that the judgment imposed is uncertain, indefinite, conditional, alternative, and contingent in respect to the time the said judgment shall go into effect and be executed upon the person of the defendant."

If the case was properly before us, we should have to hold against the appellant. The record sets out that—

"When the solicitor prayed judgment in this case he informed the court that this defendant has, since 1914, been under indictment in Asheville in different courts, in about 40 cases on the criminal docket, acquitted in some and convicted in others. This information is put on the record in explanation of the court's sentence and made a part of it. The sentence of the court is that he be imprisoned in the county jail for 18 months and assigned to work on the public roads of Buncombe county. It also appearing to the court that he has been sentenced by another judge, at a previous term of court, for housebreaking for 18 months, and the case is still in the Supreme Court, this sentence is made so that it shall not conflict with the other sentence if the same is approved. In other words, this sentence is to begin at the expiration of the other sentence. If the sentence in the other case is reversed or there is a new trial, this sentence is to begin first and become effective immediately."

The statement of the case on appeal was settled by the judge November 18, 1920. The defendant having been pardoned by the Governor (Bickett) in the other case pending in this court from a sentence of 18 months for housebreaking, the defendant's counsel contends that the sentence in the present case is void, and that the defendant will be entitled to a new trial.

If the sentence imposed were defective, there being no other error assigned, the defendant, though he had prosecuted his appeal in time, would not have been entitled to a new trial, but the case would have been remanded that a correct sentence might be imposed (State v. Lawrence, 81 N. C. 522; State v. Queen, 91 N. C. 660; State v. Jones, 101 N. C. 724, 8 S. E. 147); and this irrespective of whether the case came to this court by appeal from the judgment, or on a habeas corpus, or by certiorari (State v. Walters, 97 N. C. 490, 2 S. E. 539, 2 Am. St. Rep. 310; State v. Crowell, 116 N. C. 1059, 21 S. E. 502; State v. Austin, 121 N. C. 622, 28 S. E. 361).

But there is no defect in the judgment as entered. In State v. Hamby, 126 N. C. 1067, 35 S. E. 614, it was held:

That a sentence "made to begin on the expiration of another sentence imposed on the defendant" is valid. "This practice, called 'cumulative sentences,' is not unusual on the circuit, and is not contrary to any principle of law. It is in conformity with the settled criminal practice in England and most of the states where a person is convicted of several offenses at the same time"

—citing the text-books and authorities and the reasons therefor, saying, among other things:

"If this were not so, a person could not be punished for an offense committed while undergoing punishment unless the trial were postponed till its expiration. Our statute does not expressly require sentences to begin in present, and it ought not to be so construed," especially "where no present effect can be given to such sentence by reason of another subsisting judgment of imprisonment."

State v. Hamby was approved in Re Hinson, 156 N. C. 252, 72 S. E. 310, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 352, and in Re Black, 162 N. C. 459, 78 S. E. 273, in which the court said that it had been "settled by many decisions and with entire uniformity" that where a defendant had been sentenced to imprisonment on conviction of two or more indictments "sentence may be given against him on each successive conviction, the sentence of imprisonment in each successive term to commence from the expiration of the term next preceding," and that such sentences are not void for uncertainty, but the sentence should state that the later term should begin at the expiration of the former term, else they would run concurrently, citing many authorities.

But we have a more recent case affirming a sentence in the exact terms of the present sentence, which was rendered by the same judge, and was affirmed (State v. Cathey, 170 N. C. 797, 87 S. E. 532), in which Allen, J., said that—

It was "lawful to impose a sentence * * * to take effect at the expiration of the first sentence, and by legal operation such sentence would begin immediately upon the reversal of the first sentence on appeal or upon its expiration by the lapse of time, or otherwise; it cannot impair the validity of the judgment that his Honor set down in words [in this case] what the law would have written into it."

The sentence in that case was in the identical terms of that now before us.

We find no error, and have thought proper to call attention to these principles, though well settled, but, as the case was not brought up at the proper term, the motion of the Attorney General must be granted.

Appeal dismissed.

(182 N. C. 604)

WEESNER v. DAVIDSON COUNTY et al. (No. 396.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 14, 1921.)

1. Schools and school districts \Leftarrow 103(2) — Statute prohibiting special tax election within two years after unsuccessful election construed.

C. S. § 5533, does not merely prohibit an election in any special tax district for the purpose of revoking a special tax within two years from the date of the election at which the tax was voted, but also prohibits an election to authorize a special tax within two years after a similar election at which the same proposition was defeated, as the concluding clause of the statute should be construed to read, "nor shall any election be ordered and held at any time within less than two years after the date of the last election on the question in the district"; but, in computing the two years, an election held within that time, being void, may be disregarded.

2. Statutes \Leftarrow 211—Caption aids construction only in case of doubt.

Where the meaning of a statute is doubtful, its title may be called in aid of construction; but the caption cannot control where the meaning of the text is clear, especially where the headings of sections have been prepared by compilers, and not by the Legislature itself.

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Webb, Judge.

Action by C. C. Weesner against Davidson County and its Board of Education. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Error.

Civil action to enjoin the levy and collection of a special tax in Arcadia school district, Davidson county, upon the ground that the election authorizing said levy was without warrant of law and therefore void. Two reasons are assigned for the invalidity of the election: (1) It is alleged that seven persons who voted "For Special Tax" were not legal voters, and therefore ineligible to vote; and (2) that the election was held within two years after a former unsuccessful election had been held on the same question in the same district.

From a judgment sustaining the validity of the election, and establishing the legality of the tax, the plaintiff appealed.

Walser & Walser, of Lexington, for appellant.

Raper & Raper and J. R. McCrary, all of Lexington, for appellees.

STACY, J. We will omit any consideration of the first exception, as it involves only a question of fact, and, indeed, we consider it immaterial, as will presently appear.

The second exception calls for a construction of section 5533 of the Consolidated Statutes. The plaintiff contends that, under this section, the election in question is void, because, within two years prior thereto, a similar election was held for the same territory and defeated. It appears from the record that a special tax election was held for Arcadia township, with the exception of Hill's district, on September 9, 1919, at which said election a majority of the registered voters did not vote "For Special Tax." Thereafter, on April 12, 1921, the present election was held for the five districts comprising all the territory of Arcadia township, with the exception of Hill's district and one family. At this election it is alleged that a majority of the qualified voters cast ballots in favor of the special tax.

It will be observed that both elections were held within a space of less than two years apart. This would seem to be contrary to the statute, which provides:

"No election for revoking a special tax in any special tax district shall be ordered and held in the district within less than two years from the date of the election at which the tax was voted and the district established."

And then there is added:

"Nor at any time within less than two years after the date of the last election on the question in the district."

To hold, in accordance with the defendant's contention, that the prohibition refers only to an election held for the purpose of revoking a special tax already authorized, and not to an election, successful or otherwise, held for the purpose of submitting to the qualified voters of the district the question as to whether or not a special tax should be levied, would render meaningless the second clause in the statute. Again, under this construction, the statute would contain two prohibitions against an election for revoking the tax and none against an election within two years after it is defeated. It should be noted that the "election" referred to in the second clause is not limited to an election for revoking or abolishing an existing tax; but, by the express terms of the act, it applies to any "election on the question."

The qualifying phrase, "for revoking a special tax," is not brought forward in the second clause; and the use of the word "nor," a disjunctive conjunction or negative connective, would seem to repel the idea of its intended repetition. The second clause is not a duplication of the first, but rather added in contradistinction to it. Obviously it was intended to modify the word "election," and not the words "election for revoking a special tax." In its entirety it would read:

"Nor shall any election be ordered and held at any time within less than two years after the date of the last election on the question in the district."

His honor was doubtless misled by the caption, which reads as follows: "Election for Abolition Not Oftener Than Once in Two Years." Where the meaning of a statute is doubtful, its title may be called in aid of construction (Freight Discrimination Cases, 95 N. C. 434); but the caption cannot control when the meaning of the text is clear. (In re Chisholm's Will, 176 N. C. 211, 96 S. E. 1031, and cases there cited). Especially is this true where the headings of sections have been prepared by compilers, and not by the Legislature itself. Cram v. Cram, 116 N. C. 238, 21 S. E. 197. See, also, chapter 73 of the Consolidated Statutes on the subject of "Statutory Construction."

There was an election on the question September, 9, 1919, and the present election was held April 12, 1921, "within less than two years after the date of the last election on the question in the district." The clear intent of the Legislature was to avoid the multiplicity and frequency of these elections; and we must give effect to each and every part of the statute. In the instant case, however, it may not be amiss to add that, as two years have now elapsed since the election in September, 1919, we see no reason why another election could not be held at the present time, if such be desirable. In computing the two years, the election held in April, 1921 being within the prohibited period should be disregarded.

Upon the record, and as now presented, we think the plaintiff's application for a restraining order should have been granted.

Error.

ROGERS v. CITY OF ASHEVILLE.
(No. 542.)

1. Appeal and error \S 564(4)—Failure to serve a case-made within the time agreed on held not excused by fact that stenographer was busy.

Where counsel for plaintiff appellee consented to an allowance of 45 days in which to state and serve case on appeal, and subsequently extended that time 30 days more, Supreme Court will not relieve defendant, appellant, on an excuse that stenographer was busy and could not transcribe her notes within that time, since the stenographer's notes are not the supreme authority as to what occurred at the trial, and, if parties failed to agree as to what testimony was, court could be called on to settle what really occurred.

2. Stipulations \S 6—Denial of further extension to perfect appeal within court rule.

Where on appeal counsel have extended the time of serving a counter case or exceptions 60 days beyond the statutory time, and denial is made that further time was given, and no agreement in writing is filed under court rule 39 (174 N. C. 838, 81 S. E. xiii), no further time will be granted.

Action by W. F. Rogers against the City of Asheville. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals, and moves for certiorari, and plaintiff moves to dismiss the appeal. Motions denied, and judgment affirmed.

Jones, Williams & Jones and Wells & Swain, all of Asheville, for plaintiff.

George Pennell and J. W. Haynes, both of Asheville, for defendant.

CLARK, C. J. This is a petition for certiorari by the defendant, appellant, upon the following state of facts: The case was tried at April term, 1921, of Buncombe. Verdict on the issues against the defendant and judgment. By consent 45 days were allowed the defendant in which to state and serve case on appeal, and plaintiff 45 days thereafter to serve counter case or exceptions. Subsequently the plaintiff extended the time for the defendant to serve his case 30 days, making 75 days in all, on the expiration of which time the appellant did not have his case ready for service, and, the appellee, plaintiff, not agreeing to extend the time further, the appellant docketed the record proper here on November 7, and when the case was reached asked for a certiorari. The appellee, on the other hand, moved to dismiss the appeal or to affirm the judgment upon the record proper.

It is very desirable that cases on appeal should be made up as promptly as possible after the case is tried, while the facts are fresh in the minds of the parties, and there is less probability of a difference in recollection as to what occurred. Under the former practice before the adoption of the C. C. P. every case on appeal was settled by the trial judge, but the framers of the Code of Civil Procedure, mindful that Magna Carta had placed a "delay of justice" in the same category with "a denial of justice," against which litigants should be equally guaranteed, provided that "cases on appeal" should be settled by the parties or counsel, and the judge called in only in case of disagreement, thus materially expediting the hearing of appeals by relieving the judge of settling them in many cases, and also fixed 5 days after the adjournment of court as the time in which the appellant must serve his case and 3 days later for service of counter case or exceptions.

This was later extended to 10 days, and still more recently the appellant has been given 15 days to serve the case on appeal, and the appellee 10 days to serve the counter case. It is more than doubtful if this concession to delay was desirable and has not been productive of much abuse. This court, recognizing that there might be instances in which a longer time might be necessary, has held valid written agreements of counsel for an extension of time, and a more recent statute has permitted the judge, for the first time to intervene by giving an extension of time to settle the case on appeal when counsel cannot agree on this. This would seem to be the limit to which it would be advisable to extend indulgence in the time for settling cases on appeal.

In this case, by consent, 75 days were allowed, and the only excuse given for the case not being served within that time is that the stenographer was busy in court and could not transcribe her notes within the 75 days. The appellee shows, on the contrary, that for more than half of that 75 days there was no term of court in session during which the stenographer was required in court at all, and further that even during the time in which court was in session there were many days during which the stenographer's services were not required. But, however that might be, the stenographer's notes are not the compelling and supreme authority as to what transpired during the trial. The judge in charging the jury always tells them that their recollection, and not that of the court itself, must govern them as to what was the testimony of the witnesses. And in settling the cases on appeal the first authority is that of counsel themselves in agreeing as to what occurred at the trial as to the evidence, as to the charge, and otherwise, and when they do not agree the judge must settle what really occurred.

[1] Efforts have been made heretofore to make the stenographer's notes of higher authority than the agreement of counsel or even the statement of facts as settled by the judge. But on the very first occasion when this view was advanced the court held in Cressler v. Asheville, 138 N. C. 485, 51 S. E. 54, that, when the parties cannot agree, the judge must settle it, saying:

"The stenographic notes will be of great weight with the judge, but are not conclusive if he has reason to believe there was error or mistake. The stenographer cannot take the place of the judge, who is alone authorized and empowered by the Constitution to try the cause, and who alone (if counsel disagree) can settle for this court what occurred during the trial. * * * Of course, if such notes were conclusive as to the evidence, they should be equally so as to what exceptions were taken and rulings made, and all other matters occurring in the progress of the trial. This would simply depose the judge and place the stenographer in his place for all the purposes of an appeal. All the care taken to secure men of high integrity and impartiality to discharge the functions of the important office of judge of the superior court * * * become of secondary importance if a stenographer appointed by the clerk of the court, and not the judge elected by the people of the state, is to decide what were the exceptions, rulings, evidence, and other incidents of a trial. Now, as always, these matters must be settled by the judge when counsel disagree. The stenographer's notes will be of valuable aid to refresh his memory, but the stenographer does not displace the judge in any of his functions."

In that case we were guarding against the threatened unnecessary expense of voluminous transcripts of cases on appeal by dumping into them the stenographer's notes. Now we are threatened with, if possible, a greater evil by the opportunity, and indeed the inducement to great delays in appeals by making the settlement of cases for this court depend upon the convenience or disposition of the stenographers, who may or may not have other calls upon their time. If we were to yield to this, then, to paraphrase the language of Johnson in regard to Charles XII of Sweden, litigants

"Would be condemned weary suppliants to wait
While ladies interpose and counsel debate."

This is the fourth time at this term that blame for delays to bring up cases in the time prescribed by statute has been sought to be charged upon the stenographers, to the exoneraton of counsel, by alleging the heavy business requirements of stenographers.

We must repeat again that stenographers are a helpful aid, but are not indispensable. They have not been indispensable heretofore, and are not absolutely indispensable now. The calls upon their time cannot be used to increase the expense of appeals by dumping their notes into the transcript, which we refused to permit in Cressler v. Asheville, supra, nor to excuse, as has been attempted at this term, delays beyond the statutory time or the time agreed upon by consent to settle cases on appeal. If the stenographer or stenographers employed, on any given case, cannot reduce the notes so as to state the evidence in a narrative form or within the prescribed time, they must be dispensed with, or a sufficient number of stenographers employed to accomplish the duty of aiding the court, whose records must not be padded, nor delays in appeals inflicted upon litigants, by a plea that the stenographers employed could not do the work in apt time. Cressler v. Asheville, supra, has been often cited and approved. Bucken v. Railroad, 157 N. C. 444, 73 S. E. 137; Brazille v. Barytes Co., 157 N. C. 460, 73 S. E. 215; Overman v. Lanier, 157 N. C. 551, 73 S. E. 192; Skipper v. Lumber Co., 158 N. C. 323, 74 S. E. 342; Brewer v. Mfg. Co., 161 N. C. 212, 76 S. E. 237; Bank v. Fries, 162 N. C. 516, 77 S. E. 678; State v. Shemwell, 180 N. C. 722, 104 S. E. 885. And more immediately upon this point are State v. Harris, 181 N. C. 613, 107 S. E. 466, and Hotel Co. v. Griffin, 109 S. E. 871, and other cases at this term.

[2] Counsel for the plaintiff were liberal in the agreement to extend the time to 75 days, which was 2 months beyond the statutory time. They deny that they extended it beyond that time, and this court has uniformly held that, when an agreement between counsel is denied, it will not be recognized by us unless in writing and filed in the cause, which is the express requirement of our rule 39 (174 N. C. 838, 81 S. E. xlii). As stated by us in Graham v. Edwards, 114 N. C. 229, 19 S. E. 150, and in the cases there quoted, and in the citations to that case in the Anno. Ed., we must strictly adhere to that rule for the very sufficient reason that we have no means, and no disposition, to pass upon the relative accuracy of the memory of counsel, who can so readily avoid such controversies by complying with the rule.

The motion for certiorari must therefore be denied. The appeal having been docketed here before the call of the district at this, the first term after the trial below, the motion to dismiss must also be denied, but, there being no error upon the face of the record, as docketed, the judgment below must be affirmed.

IRVIN et al. v. HARRIS et al. (No. 357.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 14, 1921.)

1. Appeal and error §151(3) — In administrator's suit to sell land for assets, creditor entitled to appeal as "party aggrieved."

Where, in an administrator's action against devisees and beneficiaries to sell land for assets, claimants were directed to file evidence of their claims, and on a hearing before a referee their claims were contested, the proceeding was analogous to a creditors' bill to prevent undue preference and to marshal the assets of the estate, and a creditor on rejection of his claim by the referee was such a "party aggrieved" as had a right of appeal under C. S. § 632.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Aggrieved Party.]

2. Insane persons §77—Delivery of note to partner for his insane wife held a sufficient "delivery."

Under C. S. § 2976, defining "delivery" as the transfer of possession, actual or constructive, from one person to another, and section 2997, providing that a valid and intentional delivery by one no longer having possession of an instrument is presumed, where a partnership executed a note to the insane wife of one of the partners and delivered it to her husband and thereafter paid the note to him by checks indorsed by him, there was a sufficient delivery, though the husband signed the note in the name of the firm.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Delivery.—Delivery.]

3. Bankruptcy §431—Filing of claim not release of bankrupt's surety.

Conceding that a partnership and a new firm formed after the death of one of the partners were distinct entities, that the new firm assumed the liabilities of the old, and that the new firm thereby became the principal debtor, and the old firm a surety, a creditor of the old firm did not release it by filing his claim in bankruptcy proceedings against the new firm.

4. Election of remedies §3(1)—Doctrine inapplicable unless remedies inconsistent.

The doctrine of election of remedies is founded on the principle that where, by law or contract, there is a choice of two remedies which proceed upon opposite and irreconcilable claims of right, the one taken excludes and bars the prosecution of the other, and does not apply if the remedies are not inconsistent.

5. Limitation of actions §74(1) — Action might be brought by insane payee of note within three years after guardian's qualification.

Under C. S. § 416, relative to acknowledgments or new promises, section 407, providing that one insane when a cause of action accrues may sue within the time limited after the disability is removed, and section 412, authorizing suit within one year after the issuing of the letters testamentary or of administration on the deceased debtor's estate, where the payee of a note was insane when it was executed for a pre-existing debt, her guardian was entitled to sue within three years from the time of his qualification and was not required to sue within one year after the issuing of letters of administration on the debtor's estate.

6. Insane persons §77—Payment to insane woman's husband does not exonerate debtor.

Delivery of a note payable to an insane woman to her husband did not empower him to collect it, and the right of collection was vested exclusively in her guardian, and payment to the husband did not exonerate the debtor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rockingham County; Webb, Judge.

Action by Eugene Irvin and another, as administrators c. t. a. of H. C. Harris, against W. C. Harris and others, to sell land for assets, in which various claimants were directed to file their claims. From a judgment confirming the report of a referee, the claimant, Robert Harris, Jr., appeals. Reversed.

"P. S. I will that if Eva should die without heirs all I have willed to her I will it to the heirs of W. C. Harris. H. C. Harris.

"Probated June 20, 1911, by the oath and examination of Scott Fillman, Robt. Harris, B. L. Hurdle, W. C. Harris."

For many years prior to his death, H. C. Harris and his brother Robert Harris had conducted the business of manufacturing and selling tobacco in the city of Reidsville under the firm name and style of Robert Harris & Bro. In 1904, after this partnership had been formed, Mrs. Nettie Harris, wife of H. C. Harris, loaned it an amount of money which was credited to her on the books of the firm. This amount was increased from time to time until it reached $8,400, and on January 9, 1909, Robert Harris & Bro. executed to Mrs. Nettie Harris a promissory note, which was as follows:

"$8,400. One day after date we promise to pay to Mrs. Nettie R. Harris eighty-four hundred dollars. Value received, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from date. January 9th, 1909.

"[Signed] Robert Harris & Bro."

This note, which was executed in the lifetime of H. C. Harris, went into the possession of Robert Harris, Sr., husband of the payee. On October 2, 1908, Mrs. Nettie Harris was adjudged insane and committed to the Western Hospital at Morganton, where she has since remained without lucid intervals. The note, it seems, remained among the papers of her husband until March 29, 1913, when Robert Harris & Bro. (at that time composed of Robert Harris Sr., and W. C. Harris, son of H. C. Harris) drew two checks on the Bank of America aggregating $10,756 (the amount of the principal and interest of the note of $8,400) payable to the order of Mrs. Nettie Harris. These checks were delivered to Robert Harris and by him indorsed in the name of Mrs. Nettie Harris and delivered to J. H. Walker & Co. The checks were indorsed by Walker & Co., and paid by the Bank of America. After the death of H. C. Harris, the firm composed of Robert Harris and W. C. Harris conducted the business of the partnership until June 9, 1913, when the firm and the individual members were duly adjudged bankrupt by the District Court of the United States for the Western District of North Carolina. The claim of Mrs. Nettie Harris was proved by her guardian in the bankruptcy court against the new firm of Robert Harris & Bro., and credited with a dividend duly paid from the bankrupt estate.

At the time of his death (April 11, 1911) H. C. Harris was seized and possessed of several tracts of land. Although the will of H. C. Harris was probated June 20, 1911, no one qualified as his personal representative until June 30, 1913, when letters of administration with the will annexed were granted to Eugene Irvin and R. S. Montgomery. On August 28, 1915, the administrators instituted a proceeding against the devisees and beneficiaries to sell the testator's land for assets. The defendants, answering and pleading various defenses, particularly denied the alleged debts, pleaded the statute of limitations, and alleged that the claimants, or some of them, had released the old firm by accepting the new firm of Robert Harris & Bro. as their debtor. By an order of the court all claimants were directed to file with the administrators the original evidence of their claims for inspection by the defendants. When the case was called the court ordered that all matters in controversy be referred to Lindsay Patterson, Esq., with directions to report upon his findings of fact and conclusions of law. On July 28, 1914, Robert Harris, Jr., as guardian of Mrs. Nettie Harris, brought suit on her claim in the superior court of Rockingham county; but the claim was not reduced to judgment. It was presented to the referee, who, in disallowing it, made the following report:

"That exhibit 71 is a note executed by Robert Harris & Bro. to Mrs. Nettie R. Harris for $8,400 of date January 9, 1909. That no payments were ever made on this note until March 29, 1913, when the same was paid off. That the same was presented to the administrators of H. C. Harris, but was not admitted by them, and that prior to said presentment the note had been paid. That on July 28, 1914, Robert Harris, Jr., guardian of Nettie R. Harris, brought suit on said note in the superior court of Rockingham county against the administrators of H. C. Harris. I therefore find that the note was paid prior to said presentment and suit, and if not paid, but in existence, it was at the time of the suit barred by the statute of limitations. Therefore I find that Robert Harris, Jr., guardian of Nettie R. Harris, is entitled to recover nothing from the estate of H. C. Harris. I further find that at the time of the last transaction Nettie R. Harris was insane, and was confined in the State Hospital at Morganton."

His honor overruled all exceptions and confirmed the referee's report. The claimant, Robert Harris, Jr., excepted and appealed.

Thos. C. Hoyle, of Greensboro, for appellant Robert Harris, Jr.

H. R. Scott, of Reidsville, and King, Sapp & King, of Greensboro, for appellees.

J. I. Scales, of Greensboro, J. M. Sharp, of Reidsville, and H. W. Cobb, Jr., and Fentress & Jerome, all of Greensboro, for defendants.

ADAMS, J. The administrators with the will annexed of H. C. Harris filed a petition before the clerk for an order to sell land to make assets. The devisees and beneficiaries under the will, who were parties defendant, filed several answers, and the cause was thereupon transferred to the civil issue docket for trial in the superior court. The court directed all claimants to file with the administrators the original evidence of their claims for the purpose of inspection by the defendants. Thereafter his honor referred all matters in controversy, with instruction to the referee to embody his findings of facts and conclusions of law in a report to be made at an ensuing term, and authorized those holding claims to make proof thereof before the referee. To the disallowance by the referee of the appellant's claim, exception was taken, and duly renewed before the judge upon confirmation of the referee's report.

[1] When the case was called for argument in this court, the defendants moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the appellant, Robert Harris, Jr., is not a party to the suit. They rely upon Dickey v. Dickey, 118 N. C. 956, 24 S. E. 715, and Strickland v. Strickland, 129 N. C. 84, 39 S. E. 735. These cases are authority for the position that in a proceeding to sell land for assets the creditors of a decedent may not be made parties plaintiff with the personal representative. There is no order in the record which makes claimants against the decedent's estate coplaintiffs with the administrators. The order permitting them to prove their claims before the referee necessarily implied the right to introduce evidence pertinent to the issue joined as to all claims not admitted. On the hearing the creditors became actors, and their claims were subject to contest by the administrators and by the beneficiaries under the will. The proceeding, therefore, was analogous to a creditors' bill brought to prevent undue preference and to marshal the assets of the estate. It necessarily follows that the creditor, upon rejection of his claim by the referee, became for the purpose of the suit such party aggrieved as is given the right of appeal by the express terms of the statute. C. S. § 632.

[2] The defendants contended that the note in question had never been delivered by the makers to the payee, Mrs. Nettie Harris. On October 2, 1908, Mrs. Harris was adjudged insane, and on January 9, 1909, the note which was executed by the old firm of Robert Harris & Bro. passed into the possession of Robert Harris, the payee's husband. Robert Harris, Jr., testified that he had no reason to believe that Mrs. Harris had ever seen the note. On March 29, 1913, the new firm of Robert Harris & Bro. paid the note by checks which were indorsed by Robert Harris in the name of the payee. The situation, then, was this: The old firm executed the note to Mrs. Harris and delivered it to her husband; afterwards the new firm paid the note by checks which were indorsed by her husband in the name of the payee. Did these transactions constitute a delivery of the note to Mrs. Harris? "Delivery" means transfer of possession, actual or constructive, from one person to another. C. S. § 2976. In Purviance v. Jones, 120 Ind. 162, 21 N. E. 1099, 16 Am. St. Rep. 320, it is said:

"While it is not indispensable that there should have been an actual manual transfer of the instrument from the maker to the payee, yet, to constitute a delivery, it must appear that the maker, in some way, evinced an intention to make it an enforceable obligation against himself, according to its terms, by surrendering control over it, and intentionally placing it under the power of the payee, or of some third person for his use. The acts which consummate the delivery of a promissory note are not essentially different from those required to complete the execution of a deed. Act and intention are the two elements essential to the delivery of a deed, which is ordinarily effected by the simple manual transfer of possession from the grantor to the grantee, with the intention of passing the title and relinquishing all power and control over the instrument itself. The final test is: Did the maker do such acts in reference to the deed or other instrument as evince an unmistakable intention to give it effect and operation, according to its terms, and to relinquish all power and control over it in favor of the grantee or obligee? Weber v. Christen, 121 Ill. 91; 2 Am. St. Rep. 68; Stone v. French, 37 Kan. 145; 1 Am. St. Rep. 237."

Section 2997 of Consolidated Statutes provides that where the instrument is no longer in possession of a party whose signature appears thereon, a valid and intentional delivery by him is presumed until the contrary is proved. It is true that Robert Harris was a member of each of the two partnerships and that the note was signed by him in the name of the old firm, but his acceptance and subsequent indorsement of the checks in his wife's name and his collection of the money thereon indicate that the old firm by delivering the note to him intended to make it an enforceable obligation for the benefit of Mrs. Harris. Indeed, the question of nondelivery seems not to have been raised at the hearing, for the referee held that the note had been paid.

[3] In the next place, the defendants insist that the new firm acquired the assets and assumed the liabilities of the old firm with the knowledge and acquiescence of the claimant, evidenced by his filing proof of the note before the trustee of the new firm after the adjudication in bankruptcy and that the claimant thereby exercised such right of election as released the estate of the retired partner from all liability. Conceding that the two partnerships were distinct entities and that the new firm assumed the liabilities of the old, it becomes material to inquire into the relation that existed between the partnerships inter se, as well as between them and the creditors of the old firm.

It has been held that the rule is probably without exception that an agreement, on dissolution of a partnership, by which one or more of the partners take the interest of their copartners, agreeing to pay all partnership liabilities, does not relieve the retiring partners from liability to firm creditors.

Smith v. Shelden, 35 Mich. 42, 24 Am. Rep. 529; Skinner v. Hitt, 32 Mo. App. 402. Likewise it has been held in most jurisdictions that where a firm is dissolved and one of the partners takes the assets and assumes the liabilities, as between themselves with respect to existing debts the members of the new firm become the principal debtors, and the retiring partner a surety. But the decisions are by no means unanimous as to the relation existing between the two partnerships and the creditors of the old firm. The weight of authority in England, sustained by authorities in America which command great respect, is to the effect that the relation of principal and surety as between the partnerships must be observed by those who have notice of the agreement and thereafter deal with the new firm. Other authorities hold that the creditors of the old firm are not affected unless they consent to the change, and that in the absence of such consent all the members of the old firm remain principals and joint debtors. Dean v. Collins, 15 N. D. 535, 108 N. W. 242, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49, and notes, 125 Am. St. Rep. 610, 11 Ann. Cas. 1027. We do not understand the defendants' counsel as contending that the claimant cannot maintain his suit on the ground that his ward was not in privity with the new firm. Withers v. Poe, 167 N. C. 372, 83 S. E. 614. But they argue that if the new firm was principal and the old firm surety, the claimant released the old firm by electing to proceed in bankruptcy against the later partnership. If it be conceded that between the two firms there existed the relation of principal and surety and that the claimant had knowledge of such relation, did filing proof of his claim with the trustee in bankruptcy constitute such an election as precluded him from prosecuting his claim before the referee?

[4] The doctrine of election is founded on the principle that where, by law or by contract, there is a choice of two remedies which proceed upon opposite and irreconcilable claims of right, the one taken must exclude and bar the prosecution of the other. A party cannot, either in the course of litigation or in dealing in pais, occupy inconsistent positions. In the language of the Scotch law, "A man shall not be allowed to approbate and reprobate." 9 R. C. L. 957; Crossman v. Universal Rubber Co., 127 N. Y. 34, 27 N. E. 400, 13 L. R. A. 91 and note. But the doctrine of election applies only where two or more existing remedies are alternative and inconsistent. If the remedies are not inconsistent there is no ground for election. Illustrations of this doctrine in its application to consistent and to inconsistent remedies appear in numerous decisions of this court. Rounsaville v. Ins. Co., 138 N. C. 195, 50 S. E. 619; Parker v. Ins. Co., 143 N. C. 339, 55 S. E. 717; Huggins v. Waters, 154 N. C. 444, 70 S. E. 842; Fields v. Brown, 160 N. C.

295, 76 S. E. 8; Machine Co. v. Owings, 140 N. C. 503, 53 S. E. 345.

Both the old firm and the new became liable to the claimant's ward—the former by virtue of the note, and the latter by assuming the debts of the old firm. Voorhees v. Porter, 134 N. C. 594, 47 S. E. 31, 65 L. R. A. 736; Withers v. Poe, 167 N. C. 373, 83 S. E. 614. The liability of each firm arose out of contract. The mere proof of claim in bankruptcy did not necessarily waive the claimant's right to enforce his contractual demand by any other appropriate legal remedy. In McFadgen v. Council, 88 N. C. 220, this court held that where a discharge in bankruptcy had been refused, or the proceedings determined without a discharge, a creditor who had proved his claim in bankruptcy did not thereby waive his right of action against the bankrupt in the state court. This decision was based on the act of 1874 (chapter 390); but Collier, discussing the question, says:

"The effect of proof of a debt on a right of action was much debated under the former law, which in terms provided that he who proved his debt in bankruptcy waived his right to enforce it by any other legal remedy. But the better opinion was that the waiver endured only until a discharge was granted or refused. The amendatory act of 1874 made this view also the written law. That the same is the law to-day, with the exception that a suit may probably be begun and, unless stayed, prosecuted to judgment, is undoubtedly true. So also is the old time rule that the remedy thus suspended comes into being the moment the discharge is granted or denied. But the state court does not lose jurisdiction. The stay is directed to the suitor, not the court, and the latter may go on if the cause is moved by the person enjoined, and a judgment resulting will be valid. The remedy of a party thus aggrieved is in contempt proceedings. It is important, however, to note that, if a stay is not granted and the suit proceeds and judgment is entered after the discharge, the latter cannot be set up as a release to the judgment. A stay of a suit pending in the state courts effected by an injunction issued by a court in bankruptcy is not a dismissal of the suit. It does not defeat the cause of action pending in the state court; it merely suspends the proceedings as long as the injunction is in force."

If, notwithstanding proof of claim, a creditor, in the absence of a stay of proceedings, may prosecute his suit to judgment against the bankrupt, a fortiori may such creditor maintain his action against the original debtor, who became surety on a contract which was made without the creditor's consent. Certainly the claimant's remedies, even if alternative, were not so inconsistent as to estop him from prosecuting the present demand by the mere filing of his proof of claim against the bankrupt's estate. We therefore hold that the doctrine of election may not be invoked in bar of the present action. We have examined the authorities relied on by the defendants and have concluded that they are not controlling upon the record in this case.

[5] The referee held that the note had been paid; or, if not paid, that it was barred by the statute of limitations.

Mrs. Harris made her first loan of money to Robert Harris & Bro. in 1904, and thereafter made other loans from time to time. These different loans were included in the note of $8,400 dated January 9, 1909. It is not necessary to decide whether the execution of the note should be considered as a conditional payment, or as collateral security, or as a mere acknowledgment of the amount due. Bank v. Hollingsworth, 135 N. C. 571, 47 S. E. 618. The statute of limitations may be determined by reference to section 418 of Consolidated Statutes:

"No acknowledgment or promise is evidence of a new or continuing contract, from which the statutes of limitations run, unless it is contained in some writing signed by the party to be charged thereby; but this section does not alter the effect of any payment of principal or interest."

The note when executed became evidence of a contract, new or continuing, from which the statute of limitations, except for the ward's disability, would have begun to run. Phillips v. Giles, 175 N. C. 412, 95 S. E. 772; Shoe Store Co. v. Wiseman, 174 N. C. 716, 94 S. E. 452. Mrs. Harris was adjudged insane on October 2, 1908. C. S. § 407, provides that if a person entitled to commence an action be insane at the time the cause of action accrues, he may bring his action within the time limited, after the disability is removed. The note was executed on January 9, 1909. The personal representatives of H. C. Harris were appointed on July 13, 1913, and the guardian of Mrs. Harris on July 13, 1913. If it be granted that the statute of limitations commenced running against Mrs. Harris at the time her guardian qualified, the action would not be barred until the expiration of three years from that date. The guardian was not required to bring suit within one year after the administrators of H. C. Harris qualified; section 412 of Consolidated Statutes enables a party to bring suit after the time limited has expired and within one year after the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration on the estate of the party against whom the cause of action accrued. Suit was instituted by the guardian within three years after his qualification, and it is therefore not barred by the statute of limitations.

[6] It is equally clear that the note has not been paid. We have said that when it went into the hands of the payee's husband, the makers intended that it should be a contract enforceable for the benefit of Mrs. Harris, and that the transaction, as to the makers, constituted a delivery. But the delivery of the note to the husband of the insane payee did not signify that he was empowered to collect it. The right of collection was vested exclusively in the guardian. The indorsement of the checks and the collection of the money by Robert Harris were without authority of law, and therefore did not exonerate the old firm from liability on the note. The claimant is entitled to recover whatever amount may be found to be due on the note sued on after deducting all proper credits.

On the appeal of Robert Harris, Jr., as guardian of Mrs. Nettie Harris, the judgment is reversed.

Reversed.

IRVIN et al. v. HARRIS et al. (No. 362.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 14, 1921.)

1. Partnership ⇨247—Organization of new firm held not to affect creditors' rights against surviving partner.

Though, after death of a partner, his devisee was made a member of a new firm, its organization did not deprive creditors of the old firm of their right to require that the surviving partner pay the firm debts and perform the firm obligations.

2. Partnership ⇨285—Estate of deceased partner and his share in assets not liable on new contract not necessary to joint business.

On dissolution of a firm by death of a partner, the estate of the decedent and his share in firm assets are absolved from any new contract or subsequent transactions of the surviving partner not necessary to the joint business.

3. Limitation of actions ⇨155(4)—Payment by surviving partner does not prevent bar as against deceased partner's estate.

Under C. S. § 417, providing that no act, admission, or acknowledgment by a partner after dissolution of the partnership, etc., is evidence to repel the statute of limitations except against the partner doing the act, or making the admission or acknowledgment, payments on firm notes by a surviving partner after the partnership had been dissolved by the death of one partner could not keep alive or renew claims which would otherwise be barred against the estate of the deceased partner.

4. Limitation of actions ⇨83(2)—When debtor dies before debt barred, action brought within statutory period or within one year after granting of administration is not barred.

Under C. S. § 412, if a debtor died before the debt was barred by limitations, a suit brought within the statutory period, or brought after the time limited and within one year after letters of administration were issued, was not barred by limitations.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rockingham County; Webb, Judge.

Action by Eugene Irvin and another, as administrators c. t. a. of H. C. Harris, against William C. Harris and others, to sell land for assets in which various claimants filed their claims. From a judgment allowing certain claims and disallowing others, defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

See, also, 109 S. E. 867.

Civil action heard on exceptions to the report of a referee.

Appeal by the defendants from a judgment of Webb, Judge, confirming the referee's report.

The plaintiff filed a petition before the clerk to sell land for assets. The defendants filed several answers, and Judge Webb referred the cause to Lindsay Patterson, Esq., to take and state an account and report his finding of facts and conclusions of law. The referee disallowed the claims of George E. Barber, executor of Mrs. Marion F. Redd (Exhibits 31, 32, 33), the claim of W. A. Kernodle (Exhibit 37), and that of Reidsville Fertilizer Company (Exhibit 69), and allowed the claims of the following persons: A. B. Troxler (Exhibit 3), A. J. Whittemore (Exhibit 4), D. W. Williams (Exhibit 5), R. P. Thacker (Exhibit 6), A. R. Troxler (Exhibit 7), A. J. Whittemore (Exhibit 8), Nannie B. Motley (Exhibit 9), James W. Walker (Exhibit 10), J. H. Duncan (Exhibit 11), J. P. Matkins (Exhibit 12), J. D. Matkins (Exhibit 13), S. F. Holderby (Exhibit 14), Robert Harris, Jr. (Exhibit 72), Geo. D. Williams (Exhibit 73), Carrie Irvin (Exhibit 74), C. J. Williams (Exhibit 75), Robert Brown (Exhibit 78), M. G. Watlington (Exhibit 79), P. H. Williamson, trustee (Exhibit 80), C. H. Overman (Exhibit 81). The referee found that all the foregoing claims which he allowed were presented to and admitted by the administrators of H. C. Harris. As to these claims the defendants do not insist on the bar of the statute of limitations, but contend that all the remaining claims which were allowed by the referee were barred by the statute.

The defendants further contend that all creditors whose claims have been allowed are precluded from collecting such claims from the estate of H. C. Harris for the reason that these creditors elected to file their claims against the successors of the old firm of Robert Harris & Bro. Reference is made to the statement of facts in the case of Robert Harris, guardian.

J. I. Scales, of Greensboro, J. M. Sharp, of Reidsville, and H. W. Cobb, Jr., and Fentress & Jerome, all of Greensboro, for appellants.

H. R. Scott, of Reidsville, and King, Sapp & King, of Greensboro, for appellees.

Thomas C. Hoyle, of Greensboro, for Cora W. Best, A. E. Chandler, R. H. Scales, E. M. Redd, and Anna J. Redd.

Manly, Hendren & Womble, of Winston-Salem, for Robert Brown, M. C. Watlington, P. H. Williamson, trustee, and C. H. Overman.

ADAMS, J. Not only have the defendants pleaded the statute of limitations in bar of all claims allowed by the referee, except such as were presented to and admitted by the personal representatives of H. C. Harris, but they have invoked against the validity of all claims the doctrine of the claimants' election between inconsistent remedies. The latter proposition has been discussed in the appeal of Robert Harris, Jr., as guardian of Mrs. Nettie Harris, and what is there said resolves the question against the contention of the defendants. There remains for discussion the defendants' plea of the statute of limitations.

It is essential to a proper consideration of this plea that certain dates be kept in mind. H. C. Harris died on April 11, 1911; his personal representatives qualified on June 30, 1913, and on July 3 gave due notice to creditors to present their claims on or before July 10, 1914. By virtue of the last will of H. C. Harris, and the subsequent agreement between his devisee W. C. Harris and the surviving partner, the new firm, continuing business, retained the old firm name of Robert Harris & Bro. The new firm and the individual partners were adjudged bankrupt on June 9, 1913; the Reidsville Fertilizer Company on June 30, 1913; and J. H. Walker & Co. on June 30, 1912. On many, if not all, the claims under consideration, payments were made both before and after the death of H. C. Harris. On the claims as to which the statute of limitations was pleaded, the referee held that the statute ran against the creditors from the date of the last payment, which in practically all instances was made after the death of H. C. Harris by the surviving partner, or by the other member of the new firm, and that, as suit had been instituted within the statutory period next succeeding the last payment, the claims were not barred. This proceeding was commenced on August 28, 1915, and answers were filed by the several defendants in September, October, and December, 1915, and in January, 1916. The order of reference was made at the February term of 1916, and creditors filed their claims before the referee. The referee found as a fact from the evidence and from the admissions of the defendants' counsel that suits were brought by the several creditors of the old firm of Robert Harris & Bro. against the administrators of H. C. Harris in the superior court of Rockingham county. The time at which these respective actions were instituted will be referred to hereafter as occasion may require.

Counsel for the defendants admit that their contention as to the application of the statute of limitations depends upon the proper answer to two questions: (1) Could Robert Harris, surviving partner of the old firm of Robert Harris & Bro., by making payments after the death of his former copartner, renew or keep alive the firm notes and thereby prevent the administrators or the heirs of the deceased partner from interposing the bar of the statute? (2) Was the statute of limitations suspended from the death of H. C. Harris until the appointment of his administrators?

[1] Now, as to the first question: It is true that after the death of H. C. Harris his devisee was accepted as a member of the new firm; but the organization of the new firm did not deprive creditors of the old firm of their right to require that the surviving partner pay the firm debts and perform the firm obligations.

[2] Here, however, the creditors have undertaken to subject to the payment of their claims the individual estate of the deceased partner. What, then, was the legal effect of payments made by the surviving partner after the death of his copartner? Upon the dissolution of a firm by the death of a partner, the estate of the deceased partner and his share in the firm assets are absolved from any new contract or subsequent transactions of the surviving partner which are not necessary to the joint business. Martlett v. Jackman, 3 Allen (Mass.) 287. In Copeland v. Collins, 122 N. C. 624, 30 S. E. 315, it was held that a payment renews the obligation, and in Bank v. Hollingsworth, 135 N. C. 569, 47 S. E. 622, Justice Connor said:

"It seems to be equally well settled that a surviving partner has no power, after dissolution, to renew or indorse a note in the name of the firm. 'The dissolution operates as a revocation of all authority for making new contracts. It does not revoke the authority to arrange, liquidate, settle and pay those before created. The implied power of the expartner does not extend to giving a note or to drawing a bill in the firm's name, nor could he bind the firm by a check in its name. Renewals of outstanding bills or notes of the firm stand on the same footing; and as the expartner could not draw a bill or note for a firm debt, neither could he renew a bill or note of the firm given for their debt.' Daniel Neg. Inst. § 370. 'Where a note is issued by a partner after dissolution, it will not bind the other partners, even though given for a debt due by the firm.' Ib., 371. 'Where the dissolution is by the death of one of the partners, the surviving partner may indorse a note payable to the firm in his own name.' Bristol v. Sprague, 8 Wend. 423; Whitman v. Leonard, 3 Pick. (20 Mass.) 177; Charles v. Remick, 156 Ill.

327; Woodson v. Wood, 84 Va. 478; Lusk v. Smith, 8 Barb. 570; Myatts v. Bell, 41 Ala. 222.

"In Abell v. Sutton, 3 East. 110, Lord Kenyon said, in regard to the liability of a partner for an indorsement made after the dissolution of the firm: 'To contend that this liability to be bound by the acts of his partner extends to times subsequent to the dissolution, is to my mind a most monstrous proposition. A man, in that case, could never know when he is to be at peace and retired from all the concerns of a partnership.' 22 Am. & Eng. Ency. 214. 'A note given by one partner, after dissolution of the partnership, does not bind the other partner, although given in the partnership name and in consideration or settlement of a subsisting partnership liability.' Haddock v. Crocheron, 32 Tex. 277, 5 Am. Rep. 244; White v. Tudor, 24 Tex. 639, 76 Am. Dec. 126; Fellows v. Wyman, 33 N. H. 351."

"As a general rule, after the dissolution of a partnership the surviving partner has no right to enter into or make any contract which shall be binding on the firm or affect its assets or prejudice those entitled to a share of its property after the debts are paid. In the absence of some special grant of powers to the surviving partners, the only exception involves such contracts as are appropriate and necessary in settling the affairs of the partnership." 20 R. C. L. 998.

[3] The words of the statute are still more comprehensive:

"No act, admission or acknowledgment by a partner after the dissolution of the copartnership, or by any of the makers of a promissory note or bond after the statute of limitations has barred the same, is evidence to repel the statute, except against the partner or maker of the promissory note or bond doing the act or making the admission or acknowledgment." C. S. § 417.

Here is a direct and explicit provision that neither the act, nor the admission, nor the acknowledgment of one partner occurring after the dissolution, shall be evidence against the other to repel the bar of the statute. Therefore payments made on these notes by the surviving partner, after the copartnership was dissolved by the death of H. C. Harris, cannot operate to keep alive or renew against the estate of the deceased partner claims which, except for such payments, would be barred by the statute of limitations. Wood v. Barber, 90 N. C. 79. The cases of McIntire v. Oliver, 9 N. C. 209, 11 Am. Dec. 760, Willis v. Hill, 19 N. C. 231, 31 Am. Dec. 412, and Walton v. Robinson, 27 N. C. 342, were decided prior to the enactment of section 417 of Consolidated Statutes.

[4] As to the second of these two questions the decisions apparently are not uniform. In Copeland v. Collins, 122 N. C. 621, 30 S. E. 316, it is said that "it would be difficult to reconcile our opinions upon this subject." The apparent lack of uniformity may be attributed in part at least to the difference in the phraseology of certain of the statutes which were under consideration, but the question presented by the defendants' exceptions seems definitely to have been settled. Consolidated Statutes, § 412, is as follows:

"If a person entitled to bring an action dies before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement thereof, and the cause of action survives, an action may be commenced by his representatives after the expiration of that time, and within one year from his death. If a person against whom an action may be brought dies before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement thereof, and the cause of action survives, an action may be commenced against his personal representative after the expiration of that time, and within one year after the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration, provided the letters are issued within ten years of the death of such person. If the claim upon which the cause of action is based is filed with the personal representative within the time above specified, and admitted by him, it is not necessary to bring an action upon such claim to prevent the bar, but no action shall be brought against the personal representative upon such claim after his final settlement."

In Winslow v. Benton, 130 N. C. 58, 40 S. E. 840, the present Chief Justice in construing this statute said:

"The Code, section 164, is explicit that where the 'person entitled to bring an action die before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement thereof, and the cause of action survive, an action may be commenced by his representatives after the expiration of that time and within one year from his death.' This is because the law does not encourage remissness on the part of the creditor. Coppersmith v. Wilson, 107 N. C. 31.

"But the same section, 164, prescribes a different rule when the debtor dies—'If a person against whom an action may be brought, die before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement thereof, and the cause of action survive, an action may be commenced against his personal representative after the expiration of that time, and within one year after the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration.' Dunlap v. Hendley, 92 N. C. 115; Coppersmith v. Wilson, supra; Benson v. Bennett, 112 N. C. 505.

"The general rule remains as formerly, that when the statute of limitations has once begun to run, nothing stops it, but the Code does not stop when the cause of action is one which must be brought by or against a personal representative. And for evident reasons it makes this distinction, that where the action must be brought by a personal representative, the limitation (if it would otherwise expire) is extended one year from the death of the creditor, but if the action must be against the personal representative the limitation (if it would otherwise expire) is extended one year from the issuing letters testamentary or of administration."

In Geitner v. Jones, 176 N. C. 544, 97 S. E. 494, the note in suit, which, the record shows, was not under seal, fell due June 18, 1912; the debtor died August 1, 1913; his personal representative was appointed August 4, 1917. It was held that since the debtor had died before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement of the action, the plaintiffs were entitled to institute the action within one year after the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration, because the letters had been issued within ten years after the death of the debtor. C. S. 412.

If H. O. Harris died before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement of suit against him on the claims in controversy and suit was brought within the statutory period, or if the claims were not barred at his death and suit was brought after the time limited and within one year after letters of administration were issued, the statute of limitations in either event would not be available to the defendants.

We have made a careful examination of each of the contested claims, and applying the principles herein stated, we hold the following claims are barred by the statute of limitations and should be disallowed: Exhibits 26, S. E. King; 25, Pattie E. King; 39, D. F. Kernodle; 43, J. P. Somers; 45, Francis Womack; 47, R. H. Scales; and 52, marked also 63, T. E. Balsley.

The remaining claims are not barred, and must be allowed. As to the claims which were disallowed by the court (Exhibits 31, 32, 33, 37, 69), there was no appeal.

The appellants' fourth assignment of error cannot be sustained.

The judgment as herein modified is affirmed.

Modified and affirmed.

WILCOX v. McLEOD et al. (No. 411.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 14, 1921.)

1. Frauds, statute of §81—Oral permission to cut timber may be revoked.

An oral agreement to permit the cutting and removal of timber from land may be revoked under the statute, without leaving any right of recovery against the owner of the timber giving the permission.

2. Principal and agent §97—Attorney could not convey timber, except in county specified.

Power of attorney given by heirs to executor to sell lands in one county gave such executor no right to convey timber in another county.

3. Principal and agent §97—Deed held not exercise of power of attorney.

A deed containing, "—, heirs at law of M. K. G.," and signed by "R. W. G., as executor of M. K. G., deceased," cannot be held the exercise of power of attorney given the executor by the heirs to convey lands; no reference being made thereto.

4. Appeal and error §1056(6)—Harmless error disregarded.

Plaintiff cannot complain of technical error of the court in the exclusion of evidence offered, where the whole case shows that he could not recover in any event.

Appeal from Superior Court, Moore County; Ray, Judge.

Action by W. C. Wilcox against G. McLeod and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

On January 15, 1906, defendants McLeod and wife conveyed by deed to one M. K. Gray the timber on a tract of land in Moore county, giving Gray three years in which to cut and remove the same, with a modification of the time in these words:

"Unless he or they should be providentially hindered in the cutting, manufacturing, and removing the same by reason of death, or fire, and then, in that event, he or they are to have the period of five years from the date of this indenture and agreement to cut, manufacture, and remove the same."

The plaintiff, Wilcox, claims to be the assignee of Gray, or of his heirs, and alleges that he was providentially hindered by death from cutting and removing the timber within the three years, and that consequently he had five years to cut and remove the same, under the exception in the contract, and asks for a recovery of the timber and damages.

Plaintiff submitted to a nonsuit, in deference to an intimation of the court as to his right of recovery, and appealed.

H. F. Seawell, of Carthage, for appellant.
U. L. Spence, of Carthage, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). The plaintiff says that he was hindered by two deaths: First, that of M. K. Gray; and, second, that of James Baxter, plaintiff's sawyer. It is clear that no recovery can be had simply because either Gray, or Baxter, or any one else died; but it must appear that Gray has been, or perhaps his heirs, or assigns, have been, providentially hindered by death. There is no special statement in the complaint of any facts constituting a cause of action on account of any hindrance by death but only the general allegation that the work of cutting and removing the timber were hindered by the deaths of Gray and Baxter.

Defendants, therefore, claim that the action should have been dismissed, in the beginning, and that the court committed no error in its subsequent rulings, and that, but for the nonsuit voluntarily taken, the court should dismiss the action here, ex mero motu—citing Moore v. Hobbs, 79 N. C. 535; Garrison v. Williams, 150 N. C. 674, 64 S. E. 783. It is further contended by the defendants that there is no evidence in the record to show that either Gray was, or his heirs were, hindered in the least from removing the timber within the three years, either by the death of Gray, or any other death; the sole testimony offered with respect to any hindrance being that of the plaintiff, Wilcox. We need not consider this claim of the defendants, because, as will appear later on, we are of the opinion that the plaintiff acquired, if anything, only a precarious right of possession, which could be determined, at any time, by M. K. Gray, by himself or his duly authorized agent acting in his behalf; the plaintiff, W. C. Wilcox, having only the oral permission, or contract, if it may be so called, to enter upon the land and to cut and remove the timber thereon. But more of this hereinafter.

Was Wilcox hindered by Gray's death? He himself says that he was not so hindered, but that Hodgkin, the agent of Gray, who put him in possession of the timber, stopped him from cutting under some sort of an oral contract, and this was before the death of Gray, and that he was not hindered from cutting and removing the timber by any of Gray's heirs, or his executor, after the death of Gray. There is no evidence that Gray's heirs, or executors, or devisees, were hindered by Gray's death. Indeed the evidence shows that the plaintiff did not even have the pretense of a legal title, which he claims, until after the death of Gray, and until after the three years had expired, and nothing except the oral contract of purchase with Hodgkin, the agent of Gray. M. K. Gray, through Hodgkin, his agent, stopped the work of plaintiff, as he had the right to do (the contract not being in writing). This, of course, was done in the lifetime of M. K.

Gray, the owner of the land, and put an end to all rights of plaintiff in the timber, according to his own showing, until after the death of Gray.

That the death of James Baxter, the sawyer of plaintiff, while plaintiff was cutting this timber, under the oral contract with Hodgkin or his oral permission, during the life of Gray, can be construed as one of the hindrances within the reasonable contemplation of the parties, under the terms of the contract, can hardly be made the subject of serious contention. If neither Gray was, nor his heirs were, providentially hindered from cutting and removing the timber within the three years by death, how can the plaintiff, whose record title, on which he must depend, which is dated after the expiration of the three years, claim any rights which are superior to those of defendants? In fact, the plaintiff, as will appear, has shown no title to the timber.

(a) It is further contended by the defendants that the will of M. K. Gray is not probated according to law, as the subscribing witnesses do not testify that Gray was of sound mind and disposing memory, except by the inference that the testator is the one referred to, and they do not testify that they signed as witnesses in the presence of each other; but, laying this suggestion out of the case, we proceed to consider the remaining questions.

(b) The will does not confer authority on the executor to sell this timber, if the ownership of the timber can be determined until after the death of the widow, and the power of attorney to the executor from the alleged heirs at law of Gray (which only purports to authorize a sale of Guilford county property) is without effective validity.

(c) The deed of the timber to plaintiff is void and conveys nothing. It purports to be a deed from the heirs at law of M. K. Gray, without naming any of them, and none of the heirs at law executes it; it is signed by R. W. Gray, in his capacity as the executor of M. K. Gray, deceased, and it does not even purport to be his individual deed. It is most truly a "scrap of paper," say the defendants. Gray v. Mathis, 52 N. C. 502; King v. Rhew, 108 N. C. 696, 13 S. E. 174, 23 Am. St. Rep. 76; 13 Cyc. 540 (cited by defendants' counsel), to which we add Lufkin v. Curtis, 13 Mass. 223; Catlin v. Ware, 9 Mass. 218, 6 Am. Dec. 56; Cruise's Digest of Real Property, 260, note 2. And see also, Kerns v. Peeler, 49 N. C. 226, 67 Am. Dec. 286.

[1] The case is simply this: That the original right to cut the timber on and remove the same from the land, which was given to M. K. Gray by the defendants, contained the provision as to cutting and removing within three years, or within five years if providentially hindered by death; there having been no one to impede or prolong the cutting and removal of the timber. The right to cut was then passed to the plaintiff, W. C. Wilcox, by oral agreement between him and John A. Hodgkin, agent of M. K. Gray for the purpose, and M. K. Gray, by his said agent, subsequently revoked this permission, or license, to cut and remove the timber, which he clearly had the right to do; it not being evidenced by any memorandum in writing, as required by the statute of frauds. The right acquired under the oral transaction, even if it amounted to a valid license for the time being or until withdrawn by some act of the owner, is necessarily revocable, and, when revoked, left the plaintiff without any right of recovery against the defendants. 20 Cyc. p. 212, says that it is generally held that trees and growing grass are so far realty that title to them will not pass without writing, but that crops raised by yearly labor are chattels and will pass by parol. See, also, pages 215 (4), 216, 217, and 218. We find the following in Reed on the Statute of Frauds (a very excellent treatise on that important subject) § 685, which is that—

"An oral invalid contract, anywhere in the line of title, vitiates the latter; and in an action brought to recover a chattel, if the evidence introduced by the plaintiff to establish his title showed that the title depended upon a verbal contract within the statute of frauds, the courts ought to instruct the jury to disregard such evidence. If a writing is necessary to pass the right to the thing in demand, etc., a submission and award must be in writing. That a defendant has conveyed to a bona fide purchaser without notice does not avail, as he had no title to convey."

We have held that an agreement for the cutting upon and removal of trees from land passes the title to the trees sub modo, and is within the statute of frauds. Bunch v. Lumber Co., 134 N. C. 116, 46 S. E. 24; Hawkins v. Lumber Co., 139 N. C. 162, 165, 51 S. E. 852; Lumber Co. v. Corey, 140 N. C. 462, 53 S. E. 300, and other cases cited in the annotated edition of 134 N. C. at page 124; Moring v. Ward, 50 N. C. 272. The oral agreement between M. K. Gray (acting through his agent Hodgkins) and the plaintiff, purporting to pass an interest in land, the trees being regarded as a part thereof, was void under our statute of frauds, and plaintiff acquired no interest therein, and certainly none, except at the will of M. K. Gray, which he exercised against a further continuance of the right to cut and remove the timber. His right, if any existed, was thus terminated.

[2, 3] This being so, he now claims that it was restored by the power of attorney of M. K. Gray's heirs to R. W. Gray, his executor. But the power, at most, applied only to the lands in the county of Guilford, and the lands in controversy lie in the county of Moore; so that plaintiff cannot improve his position by a reliance upon the power. Besides, the power, even as to the Guilford lands, was never exercised, as no valid deed was ever made by the executor, as to those lands; for under the power, the instrument, claimed to be the executor's deed, describes only the lands in Moore county, the timber on which was conveyed by the defendants to M. K. Gray. It would seem to be useless to further consider the question as to whether that deed was properly framed and executed by the executor. There is no reference in it to the power, the names of the heirs were never inserted in it, and, while it contains a blank presumably for their names, it is still there, and it thus appears in the deed, "_____, heirs at law of M. K. Gray," and signed by "R. W. Gray, as Executor of M. K. Gray, Deceased [Seal]," though that name and title nowhere appears in the body of the deed. See cases supra on this point, and Bateman v. Lumber Co., 154 N. C. 248, 70 S. E. 474, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 615.

But, even if the deed were properly drawn and executed, and sufficient, in form, to pass the title, the executor had no power under the will to convey the Moore county lands, until other designated lands had been first sold, and then only to pay his testator's debts, and he had no right to make the deed under the power, as it did not embrace these lands, and only described the lands in Guilford, nor did he profess, as executor, to be acting either under the power contained in the letter of attorney or under any power to be found in the will. The plaintiff, therefore, so far as this paper writing is concerned, is hedged in by many, if not insurmountable, difficulties.

Upon a careful review of the entire case, as shown even by the plaintiff himself, the intimation of the judge was correct.

[4] If by any chance the court committed technical error in the exclusion of any evidence offered, the whole case shows that the plaintiff can in no event recover, and the voluntary nonsuit was properly taken by the plaintiff, and leaves him out of court. Bateman v. Lumber Co., 154 N. C. at page 249, fifth headnote, 70 S. E. 474, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 615.

The ruling of the court is free from reversible error.

HOUSE v. GILLETT et al. (No. 99.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 14, 1921.)

1. Brokers \S 63(1)—Entitled to commissions for procuring contract with responsible purchaser, though principal surrendered rights thereunder.

A broker, employed to sell real estate, who within the terms of the authority given procures a contract with a responsible purchaser, is entitled to his stipulated commissions, or the reasonable worth of his services if no definite amount is specified, and his claim therefor is not affected because his principals voluntarily surrendered his rights under the contract.

2. Brokers \S 88(3)—Correspondence held to show binding contract of sale of timber so as to entitle a broker to commissions.

Letters and correspondence held to show a binding contract of sale of timber procured by a broker within the authority conferred so as to entitle him to his commissions from the seller who surrendered his rights thereunder.

Stacy, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Halifax County; Kerr, Judge.

Action by A. C. House against R. G. Gillett and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants, appeal. Affirmed.

The action is to recover $3,000 with interest, as an amount alleged to be due plaintiff for commission in effecting a sale of the timber on a certain tract belonging to defendants. The court being of opinion that plaintiff was entitled to recover on the facts admitted in the pleadings, judgment was so entered, and defendants excepted and appealed.

F. H. Brooks, of Smithfield, Travis & Travis, of Halifax, and Butler & Herring, of Clinton, for appellants.

Geo. C. Green and W. E. Daniel, both of Weldon, for appellee.

HOKE, J. Plaintiff filed his complaint, duly verified, in terms as follows:

Complaint.

The plaintiff, complaining of the defendants, alleges:

(1) That the plaintiff is a resident of the county of Halifax, state of North Carolina, and the defendants are residents of the county of Johnson, state of North Carolina.

(2) That on April 9, 1920, the defendants wrote plaintiff the following letter:

"Smithfield, N. C., April 9, 1920.

"Mr. A. C. House, Weldon, N. C.—Dear Sir: We agree to pay you the sum of three thousand dollars ($3,000.00) to make sale for us of our tract of timber near Clinton, N. C., at the price and on the terms outlined in our letter to you of this date. Yours very truly, R. G. Gillett and Abell & Gray, by J. H. Abell."

(3) On April 9th the defendants wrote the plaintiff the following letter, which is the letter referred to in the preceding paragraph:

"Smithfield, N. C., Apr. 9, 1920.

Mr. A. C. House, Weldon, N. C.—Dear Sir: We hereby authorize you to make sale for us on or before April 12, 1920, of our tract of timber near Clinton, N. C., at the price of $135,000.00, on the following terms: $45,000.00 cash, and the balance in five equal annual payments.

"We agree to sell an option on the timber at the price and on the terms mentioned for a period of sixty (60) days for the sum of $10,000.00, this amount to apply on the purchase price in case the option is exercised. Yours very truly, R. C. Gillett and Abell & Gray, by J. H. Abell."

(4) On April 13, 1920, the defendants wrote the plaintiff the following letter, to wit:

"Smithfield, N. C., Apr. 13, 1920.

"Mr. A. C. House, Weldon, N. C.—Dear Sir: Following up our conversation with reference to sale of the A. T. Griffin Manufacturing Company timber in Sampson county, beg to say that if the deal with Camp Manufacturing Company shall go through, and the final timber estimate shall fall below twenty-two and one-half (22½) million feet, and the purchase price be thereby reduced below $135,000.00, we still agree to pay you the sum of three thousand dollars ($3,000.00) for your services. R. C. Gillett. H. G. Gray. J. H. Abell."

(5) On April 12, 1920, the Camp Manufacturing Company wrote the plaintiff the following letter, to wit:

"Franklin, Va., Apr. 12, 1920.

"Mr. A. C. House, Weldon, N. C.—Dear Sir: In re A. T. Griffin Manufacturing Co.'s Timber Holdings in Sampson County, N. C.

"Confirming conversation with you to-day in regard to timber in Sampson county, N. C., known as the A. T. Griffin Manufacturing Company's holdings, consisting of about 77 tracts and covered by 51 deeds, which tracts you estimate at about 25,000,000 feet; time to cut 5 years with 5 years further time by paying 6 per cent. interest on the original purchase price.

"If there is 23,000,000 feet of timber on these tracts, which tracts are covered by the various deeds to the Griffin Mfg. Company, we will give you, or the now owners of the timber (Abell & Gray) $135,000.00 for this timber, payable as follows: $45,000.00 cash and the balance in 1, 2, 3 and 4 years with 6 per cent. interest from date of papers. Should you and your associates accept this proposition, we are to pay $5,000.00 on acceptance and the balance of the cash payment, to wit, $40,000.00 when estimate is completed and satisfactory deed delivered to us; all papers to be dated June 1, 1920.

"To arrive at the estimate of the quantity of timber on this land, we are willing to follow the following procedure, that is to say, we put in a man and you a man, and we, together, to select the third man, the third man to be a man who has never estimated timber for either of us, or at least the third man is to be satisfactory to us. Our man and your man to go in and estimate the timber and on any tract or tracts that our men cannot agree upon, then we are to call in the third man, as stated above, and he is to send us report of every tract of timber he estimates, and he is not to estimate to exceed four tracts before we get the estimate, and if the third man or umpire is not satisfactory to either party, then either party has a right to call him off and put in another third man to estimate not to exceed four tracts of timber (the selection of this third man to be in the same manner as referred to above) before we receive the estimate, and if this estimate is not satisfactory, then we could call him off and continue the selection of a third man in the manner referred to above until all the timber is estimated and terms and conditions of estimating as above outlined complied with.

"If you give us an option, we would start our man in there just as soon as we could and continue estimating until we complete the whole transaction, and all of it should be closed up within sixty days unless extended by agreement between all parties concerned.

"If however, there is not 23,000,000 feet of timber on the various tracts referred to, constituting the A. T. Griffin Manufacturing Company's holdings, and the actual amount of timber, by estimate agreed upon, does not come to $135,000.00, we would take the quantity of timber shown by estimate at $6.00 per thousand feet. If there is not 23,000,000 feet, and we should buy the timber at the rate of $6.00 per thousand feet, we will pay $45,000.00 cash and the balance in 1, 2, 3 and 4 years with 6 per cent. interest from date of papers; the cash payment, however, to be less $5,000.00 which amount is to be paid in case our proposition is accepted.

"Yours very truly,

"Camp Manufacturing Company.

By ———, Pres."

(6) That the letter referred to in the preceding paragraph was delivered to the defendants, and on April 13, 1920, the defendants wrote the Camp Manufacturing Company, Franklin, Va., the following letter, to wit:

"Smithfield, N. C., Apr. 13, 1920.

"Camp Manufacturing Co., Franklin, Va.—Gentlemen: We have noted your letter of the 12th inst., addressed to Mr. A. C. House with reference to the timber holdings of A. T. Griffin Manufacturing Company, in Sampson county, consisting of about 77 tracts covered by 51 deeds, and beg to say that we have decided to accept your proposition to pay $135,000.00 for the same, $5,000.00 to be paid cash and $40,000.00 to be paid when estimate is completed and contract made, but it is understood that we are selling you all the timber owned by A. T. Griffin Manufacturing Company, in Sampson county, covered by the 51 deeds with time for cutting and removing same as therein specified, which is approximately five years, with five years' extension by paying six per cent. interest on original purchase price of same. Estimate of timber to be made according to method set out in your letter to Mr. House, and should estimate not amount to 22,500,000 feet, then said timber to be paid for according to estimate at price of $6.00 per thousand feet

"After the payment of the $45,000.00, the balance of the purchase price of said timber is to be divided into four equal payments to be made annually, with interest at six per cent. from May 1, 1920, with provisions that in case you wish to cut any of said timber, same shall be paid for in advance at the rate of $6.00 per thousand feet, which payment shall be applied to the next annual installment falling due.

"Upon receipt of this letter (which is sent by Mr. House) we will thank you to send us your check for $5,000.00 according to your proposition contained in letter of the 12th inst., to Mr. House. If you desire more formal contract before paying the $5,000.00, we shall be glad to meet you or your attorney in Smithfield and enter into any reasonable arrangement with you respecting the matter.

"We are holding Mr. Ashley at Clinton to meet your estimator and go over these several tracts of timber and make joint estimate of this timber, which of course is at considerable expense, and we trust you will proceed at your earliest convenience to send your man to Clinton to enter upon this work.

"Thanking you in advance for your early reply, we are, yours very truly."

That the above letter was given to the plaintiff to be by him delivered to the Camp Manufacturing Company, and on the 14th day of April, 1920, he wrote the Camp Manufacturing Company the following letter, to wit:

"Franklin, Va., April 14, 1920.

"Mr. P. D. Camp, Pres., Camp Mfg. Co., Franklin, Va.—Dear Sir: I herewith hand you letter of acceptance from Messrs. Abell, Gray & Gillett in which they agree to sell you the holdings of A. T. Griffin Manufacturing Company as per your offer in your letter to me of the 12th inst.

"You will note that the amount of timber as mentioned in your letter of 23,000,000 feet has been changed in their acceptance to 22,500,000 feet, which was done at my request, because if there had been more than 22,500,000 feet and less than 23,000,000 feet, you would have paid more than $135,000.00 for it.

"Messrs. Gillett, Abell & Gray requested me to say to you that Mr. Griffin, of the A. T. Griffin Manufacturing Company wishes to make bond of title, securing from you contract to carry out the terms of payment, and, not taking your notes for the deferred payments, he believes if he takes your notes that he will have to give it in as income received during this year, and it is his desire to distribute this income over a period of four years, during which time the actual payments are to be. I think he is so advised by his attorney. I do not know just what a bond of title is, but your attorney can advise you along this line, and if you can do so, I believe it would be good policy to accommodate Mr. Griffin. However, if this cannot be worked out satisfactorily to yourself and Messrs. Gillett, Abell & Gray, it is their desire to satisfy you in the matter even to the extent of their paying Mr. Griffin cash for the timber and giving you a straight deed secured by a deed of trust. You will note that there is a provision in the letter of acceptance, providing that you might cut timber prior to the payment of the deferred payments by paying in advance at the rate of $6.00 per thousand feet. There was nothing in your letter which mentioned this and this provision was put in to cover any case in which you might wish to cut the timber before all the payments had been made. Messrs. Gillett, Abell & Gray also requested me to say to you that they were willing to meet your attorney or representative and enter into any reasonable agreement as regards details to carry out the terms and spirit of your offer to them in their letter of acceptance to you.

"If I can be of any further service to you in this transaction, kindly advise me. I will be away from Weldon a few days the first of next week, but after that time I see no reason why I cannot act for you on short notice.

"I have left the deeds to all the Griffin holdings in your office, and wish to call your attention to the fact, as I mentioned, when here on the 12th, that there are two deeds to small tracts of timber in this lot carrying five years to cut and five years' extension, and one carrying seven years to cut and five years' extension.

"All of the other deeds, as I have read them, carry ten years to cut with five years extension. All the deeds, I think, are dated in the latter part of 1914, and early part of 1915.

"Yours very truly."

(7) That on April 17, 1920, the Camp Manufacturing Company wrote the defendant the following, to wit:

"April 17, 1920.

"Messrs. R. C. Gillett, H. G. Gray, and J. H. Abell, Smithfield, N. C.—Gentlemen: In re Purchase of A. T. Griffin Manufacturing Company's timber holdings in Sampson County, N. C.

"We are in receipt of your letter of the 13th accepting our offer of the 12th. We have written to try to get estimators, and will get estimators to go in the timber just as soon as we can, and we thought it would be well for us to try to agree upon the third party. Do you know of any good man to act as Umpire? Check for $5,000.00 has been made up and turned over to Mr. T. D. Savage, our attorney, Norfolk, Va., for delivery to you as soon as some little details concerning the contract have been satisfactorily worked out between your attorney and Mr. Savage. We would thank you to kindly advise Mr. Savage who your attorney is, so that he can get in communication with him.

"Yours very truly, Camp Mfg. Co.,
"pdc/b By ——— President.
"CC: To Mr. A. C. House, Weldon, N. C."

(8) That the Griffin timber, the A. T. Griffin Manufacturing Company's timber, is the same timber mentioned in the two letters of the defendants of April 9 and April 13, and the letters of the Camp Manufacturing Company to A. C. House of April 12, 1920, and the letter of the defendants to Camp Manufacturing Company dated April 13, 1920, above referred to, and also the letter of the plaintiff to Camp Manufacturing Company dated April 14, 1920, and above referred to, and also the letter of Camp Manufacturing Company to defendants dated April 17, 1920.

(8½) The defendants wrote the plaintiff the following letter, to wit:

"Smithfield, N. C., May 31, 1920.

"Mr. A. C. House, Weldon, N. C.—Dear Mr. House: We beg to advise that we have been to see the Camp Manufacturing Company and have returned to them the $5,000.00 paid on the contract, and have canceled the same because they insist on the Doyle rule in estimating the timber. We are, therefore, no longer under obligation to them. Yours very truly, R. C. Gillett and Abell & Gray, by J. H. Abell."

(9) That the Camp Manufacturing Company, through the efforts of the plaintiff, actually contracted to purchase of the defendants the timber mentioned in the preceding paragraphs, and actually paid the defendants the sum of $5,000 called for in said contract.

(10) That the plaintiff has performed his part of said contract in full, and has demanded payment of the sum of $3,000 of the defendants, which they have failed and refused, and still refuse, to pay.

(11) That by reason of the matters and things above set out the defendants are indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $3,000 with interest from April 13, 1920.

Wherefore, plaintiff demands judgment against the defendants for the sum of $3,000 with interest and for cost.

Defendants filed answer to said complaint, duly verified, in term as follows:

The defendants answering the complaint of the plaintiff, herein filed allege:

(1) That paragraph 1 of the complaint is admitted.

(2) That paragraph 2 of the complaint is admitted.

(3) That paragraph 3 of the complaint is admitted.

(4) That paragraph 4 of the complaint is admitted.

(5) That paragraph 5 of the complaint is admitted.

(6) That paragraph 6 of the complaint is admitted, wherein it is alleged that the defendants wrote the Camp Manufacturing Company the letter, set out in paragraph 6 of the complaint.

As to the remainder of said paragraph, these defendants have no knowledge, and therefore deny the same.

(7) That paragraph 7 of the complaint is admitted.

(8) That paragraph 8 of the complaint is admitted, except where it is stated that the plaintiff wrote the Camp Manufacturing Company on April 14, 1920, of which these defendants have no knowledge, and therefore deny the same.

(9) That paragraph 9 of the complaint is denied.

(10) That paragraph 10 of the complaint is denied.

(11) That paragraph 11 of the complaint is denied.

There was a further answer, duly verified, alleging in effect that defendants owed plaintiff nothing because by the terms of the agreement they were only liable in case the "deal with the Camp Manufacturing Company goes through," and that no sale had ever been consummated, nor had defendants ever received anything thereon for the reason further stated that after the interchange of the letters and writings above set forth, and after defendants had received the $5,000 check given by the Camp Manufacturing Company as part payment on the alleged contract, when defendants met for the purpose of proceeding with the deal, the estimator selected by the Camp Manufacturing Company, one S. R. Flowers, insisted that the timber be estimated by the Doyle rule, and would consent to no other, and that ascertaining that under such rule the amount of defendants' timber would be reduced 25 to 33 per cent., defendants were therefore forced to call off the proposition, and returned to the Camp Manufacturing Company the $5,000 it had paid on the transaction.

[1, 2] Upon this a sufficient statement for a proper apprehension of the question presented, we concur in the ruling of the court below that on the admissions appearing in the pleadings the plaintiff is entitled to judgment. It is a well-established principle that a real estate broker, employed by the owner to make sale of designated real estate, who, within the terms of the authority given succeeds in bringing about a binding contract of sale with a responsible purchaser, is entitled to his stipulated commission, or to the reasonable worth of his services, if no definite amount is specified, and his claim therefor is not affected because the principal has seen proper to voluntarily surrender his rights under the contract. Aycock v. Bogue, 108 S. E. 434, at the present term; Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192; Lunney v. Healey, 56 Neb. 313, 76 N. W. 558, reported also in 44 L. R. A. 593; Seabury v. Fidelity Insurance Trust & Safe Deposit Co., 205 Pa. 234, 54 Atl. 893; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566, 8 S. W. 391; Wilson v. Mason, 153 Ill. 304, 42 N. E. 134, 49 Am. St. Rep. 162; Parmly v. Head, 33 Ill. App. 134; Shainwald v. Cady, 92 Cal. 83, 28 Pac. 101; Leete v. Norton, 43 Conn. 219. Love v. Miller, supra, is reported also in 21 Am. Rep. 192, where the principle is thus stated in the syllabus:

Where "the owner of real estate agreed with the broker that if the latter would 'find a purchaser for designated real estate' he would give a certain sum as commission. The broker procured a person to enter into a valid and binding contract * * * to purchase, * * * but he afterwards refused to perform. Held, the broker was entitled to the sum agreed upon."

In the second headnote to Lunney v. Healey, in 44 L. R. A. p. 593, it appears that—

"Where a real estate broker contracts to produce a purchaser who shall actually buy he has performed his contract by the production of one financially able, with whom the owner actually makes an enforceable contract of sale. The failure to carry out that contract, even if the default be that of the purchaser, does not deprive the broker of his right to commissions."

And in Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. supra, it is held:

"A broker, who agrees for compensation 'to procure a purchaser' for lands, has earned his commissions when he effects a valid written contract for sale of the lands, upon terms and with a purchaser acceptable to the owner. Neither the purchaser's refusal to perform his contract upon grounds not imputable to the broker's fault, nor the voluntary failure of the vendor to compel him to do so, will defeat the broker's claim for commissions."

From a proper consideration of the letters and correspondence, there was a binding contract of sale between the defendants and the owners and the Camp Manufacturing Company of all the timber on 77 tracts of land contained in 51 deeds, and known as the holdings of the Griffin Manufacturing Company in Sampson county, at a designated price agreed and acted upon by the parties as within the authority conferred upon the broker. Even if the letter of defendants of April 13, 1920, should be considered as modifying the terms contained in the definite offer of the purchaser, the Camp Manufacturing Company, of April 12, these modifications, if they be such, were acquiesced in by the Camp Company, the other contracting party, and the company's check for $5,000 was given and received in part compliance with the contract. And as to the stipulation for the commission, while the first agreement for $3,000 was based on a sale at $135,000, in defendants' letter of April 9, 1920 (pages 1 and 2 of the record), in a subsequent letter, also on page 2, of April 13th, defendants agreed to pay the $3,000.00 for effecting a sale, though the price should fall below $135,000. It is insisted for defendants that, no rule or standard of measurement for the timber having been specified in the agreement, the same was thereby rendered too indefinite to constitute a binding contract of purchase. As we have seen, the contract contained an agreement to sell all the timber on certain designated tracts of land at a stipulated price, and the agreement itself affords a means for determining the quantity, that is, that each of the parties should select a man as estimator, and the two parties together to select the third man. And if it were otherwise, if, as defendant contends, the contract failed to specify a rule by which the timber should be estimated, the approved position is, the agreement being otherwise definite and complete, that the timber shall be measured according to the standard ordinarily prevailing in such cases. 25 Cyc. p. 1560, citing Sanderson v. Hagan, 7 Fla. 318; McIntyre v. Rodgers, 92 Wis. 5, 65 N. W. 503; Heald v. Cooper, 8 Me. (8 Greenl.) 32. Again it is contended that the subsequent agreement for $3,000, appearing in defendants' letter of April 13, 1920, was predicated and made dependent upon the proposition that the "deal with the Camp Manufacturing Company should go through"; the entire letter in reference to the proposed sale being: That if the deal with the Camp Manufacturing Company should go through, and the final estimates should fall below 22½ million feet and the purchase price be reduced below $135,000, "we still agree to pay you $3,000.00 for your services."

It will be noted that when this letter was written no contract had been made, and the terms of "the deal with the Camp Manufacturing Company should go through" clearly means "if the negotiations in which you are now engaged should result in a binding contract of sale." In view of the terms used this was the natural significance of the language, and afforded the correct and reasonable interpretation of the agreement. In one aspect of the contract as proposed by the Camp Manufacturing Company the cutting of the timber and the partial payments therefor would extend over four years, and it would not be contended that the parties contemplated any such delay before plaintiff should receive his commissions. In our opinion on the facts presented there was a binding agreement between the parties for sale of the timber, effected by the plaintiff as broker, and in which defendants have voluntarily surrendered their rights to plaintiff's prejudice, and that said plaintiff has been properly allowed to recover as per terms of the agreement.

ROSEMAN FEED CO. v. NASHVILLE GRAIN & FEED CO.

BLANTON FEED CO. v. SAME.

(No. 514.)

1. Attachment ⚡307—Intervener may only raise issue as to whether property attached belongs to him.

In an action of attachment, an intervener is entitled to be heard only upon one issue, namely, does the property attached belong to him, and the objection against the warrants of attachment that it does not appear affirmatively that the attached property belongs to nonresident defendants might be waived by the defendants, and hence the intervener, a stranger, will not be permitted to make it for them.

2. Banks and banking ⚡159—Where intervening bank is a purchaser of a draft for value, proceeds of the draft cannot be garnished in hands of correspondent bank.

In attachment suit, where the intervening bank is a purchaser of a draft for value, proceeds of the draft cannot be garnished in the hands of a correspondent bank in a suit against the payee of the draft; but, if the intervening bank is merely an agent to collect the draft, the proceeds may be garnished in the hands of the correspondent bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, McDowell County; Shaw, Judge.

Action by the Roseman Feed Company against the Nashville Grain & Feed Company, and action by the Blanton Feed Company against the Nashville Grain & Feed Company, consolidated and tried together. From judgment for plaintiff in each action, the intervener, the American National Bank of Nashville, Tenn., appeals. No error.

Civil actions to recover damages for alleged breaches of contracts, by consent, consolidated and tried together in the superior court.

Plaintiffs, local companies, having causes of action against the Nashville Grain & Feed Company, a foreign-resident partnership, instituted these suits in the superior court of McDowell county, and in each case sought to obtain service upon the defendants by attaching the proceeds of certain drafts in the hands of the First National Bank of Marion, N. C., and the First National Bank of Lincolnton, N. C.; it being alleged that said funds belong to the defendants.

Thereafter, in each case, the American National Bank of Nashville, Tenn., was allowed to intervene and set up its claim of title to the proceeds of said drafts. By consent the funds were turned over to the intervener, bonds being filed, and the garnishee banks were released from further liability. The defendants filed no answer in either case.

The causes, after consolidation, came on for trial upon the issue of ownership raised by the interpleader, and the jury returned the following verdict in each case:

"Is the American National Bank of Nashville, Tenn., the interpleader, the owner of the proceeds of draft paid by Roseman Feed Company to First National Bank of Lincolnton, N. C., and of proceeds of draft paid by Blanton Grocery Company to First National Bank of Marion, N. C., and attached in this cause, and entitled to the possession of same? Answer: No."

A. L. Quickel, of Lincolnton, for appellant.
Kemp B. Nixon, of Lincolnton, and Pless, Winborne & Pless, of Marion, for appellees.

STACY, J. [1] The first exception, appearing on the record, is directed to his honor's refusal to vacate the warrants of attachment, for that it does not appear affirmatively that the property attached belongs to the nonresident defendants, and it is therefore contended that the court was without authority to proceed further in the cause. It should be observed that the defendants have made no appearance and filed no answer in either case. This jurisdictional question, arising from an alleged want of proper service, is sought to be raised by the intervener after having taken the property upon the execution of bonds which were to stand in lieu thereof. We have held in Forbis v. Lumber Co., 165 N. C. 403, 81 S. E. 599, and cases cited therein, that this position was not open to appellant. It is entitled to be heard only upon one issue, viz.: Does the property attached belong to it? Bank v. Furniture Co., 120 N. C. 477, 26 S. E. 927. The intervening bank ostensibly has no interest in the merits of the actions pending between the present plaintiffs and the present defendants. Furthermore, this is an objection which, even if valid, might be waived by the defendants; and hence a stranger will not be permitted to make it for them. Blair v. Puryear, 87 N. C. 101.

[2] If the intervener held the drafts as a purchaser for value the proceeds derived therefrom could not be attached in the hands of the Marion and Lincolnton banks as the property of the Nashville Grain & Feed Company; but on the other hand, if the intervener acted merely as a collecting agent, the proceeds would belong to the defendants, and consequently they would be subject to attachment in the hands of the local garnishee banks. Worth Co. v. Feed Co., 172 N. C. 335, 90 S. E. 295. The case was tried upon this theory, and the question of ownership, as found by the jury, has been determined against the intervener.

Applying these settled principles to the facts presented, it follows that the remaining exceptions must be overruled. His honor charged correctly on the burden of proof and ruled properly on the plea of estoppel. After carefully examining appellant's exceptions and assignments of error, we have found no sufficient reason for disturbing the result.

No error.

MITCHELL v. TALLEY. (No. 400B.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 21, 1921.)

1. Attachment \S 7—Extends to an action for causing death of another.

Under C. S. \S 160, providing an action for causing the death of another, but one cause of action is contemplated, and the injury to the person causing the death continues to be a constituent and essential feature of the action, and has the effect of permitting an attachment of property under section 798, subsec. 4, giving the right of attachment in actions for an injury to the person by negligence or any wrongful act.

2. Attachment \S 307—Only question open to intervener is whether his right to property is superior to that conferred by writ of attachment.

In suit founded on attachment, the only question open to the intervener is whether his right to the property is superior to that conferred by the attachment.

3. Attachment \S 180—Award of alimony constituting lien on defendant's property held not valid against prior attachment.

While, under C. S. \S 1667, alimony may be awarded without divorce and made a lien against defendant's property, it does not necessarily follow that a judgment awarding alimony and making it a lien against his property will prevail against a lien of a valid attachment first levied in another court of concurrent or equal jurisdiction.

4. Courts ~~§~~481.—One superior court has no power to revoke or modify orders of another.

One superior court has no power to revoke or modify the orders and judgment of another in matters of which the latter has acquired and holds jurisdiction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Webb, Judge.

Action by S. S. Mitchell, administrator of W. T. McCulston, deceased, against Carl L. Talley. Judgment for plaintiff by default and inquiry, and on motion of plaintiff that the court proceed to execute the inquiry pursuant to the judgment, Ethel K. Talley intervened, and on her motion judgment was entered that the attachment be vacated and motion to proceed to execute the inquiry was denied, from which judgment plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Civil action to recover damages of the defendant for the willful and wrongful killing of plaintiff's intestate who was a police officer, and at the time of his death was engaged in the discharge of his duty in undertaking to arrest defendant for violation of the prohibition law. Defendant escaped immediately after plaintiff's intestate was killed and personal service on defendant could not be made. At the time of issuing the summons, plaintiff, on proper affidavit, secured a warrant of attachment, and same was levied on personal and real property of defendant in said county, including a levy on $3,111.60 on deposit in the National Bank of Greensboro. Service of summons by publication having been completed, a properly verified complaint was duly filed, and, defendant having failed to answer, there was judgment by default and inquiry, and later, the case having been called in open court, the plaintiff moved that the court proceed to execute the inquiry pursuant to the judgment. And thereupon Ethel K. Talley, wife of the defendant, having intervened after said judgment by default was entered, moved to vacate the warrant of attachment: First, for that under the statute no such warrant would properly lie in this case, and, second, because the facts alleged as the basis for the application were untrue. And upon said motion the court, being of opinion that the attachment would not lie in an action of this character, entered judgment that the same be vacated. The plaintiff then moved to be allowed to proceed to execute the inquiry, which was refused.

As a basis for the right of Ethel K. Talley to intervene in this cause, it was made to appear in a verified petition filed by the intervener that she was the wife of Carl Talley; that she had four living children of the marriage, aged six, four, and two years, and six months; that her husband was a fugitive from justice, had separated himself from the intervener, and was providing nothing for the support of herself and children; that the petitioner had made application to the superior court of Rockingham county, under section 1667 of the Consolidated Statutes, to obtain alimony without divorce; and that on such her application the judge presiding in said county had ordered and decreed as follows:

"That the plaintiff is entitled to a reasonable subsistence from the property and earnings of defendant, and that the court hereby allots to plaintiff the dwelling house and lot referred to and described in the complaint as a home for herself and said children, and further allots and assigns to her the sum of $100 a month as a reasonable subsistence for her and said children, which sum the defendant is required to pay out of his earnings or other moneys to plaintiff; and if defendant fails to pay said sum on the first day of each and every calendar month, then the same may be collected by execution out of other property or funds of the defendant in the state.

"It is further adjudged, that plaintiff have and recover of the defendant the sum of $300 as reasonable subsistence for her and said children from the date of the abandonment of them by the defendant until the date of the making of this order.

"And it is further ordered and adjudged, that the defendant be, and he is hereby required to cause all moneys on deposit in the Greensboro National Bank of Greensboro, N. C., assigned or transferred to the clerk of this court as trustee in order to secure compliance with this order.

"A certified copy of this order shall be served upon the Greensboro National Bank, to the end that it shall not pay out or permit the transfer of the funds in said bank, except as provided by order in this action, and the allowance to plaintiff is hereby secured by a lien which the court declares upon said fund."

No notice of the motion on which this judgment was entered was served on defendant Talley, and, so far as appears, there has been no service by publication on said Talley of either the notice or the summons in said proceedings, nor has there been any order for such service; but the judgment in said proceedings was entered on allegations in the petition, duly verified, as to the kind and placing of the property, and that the defendant, Carl Talley, her husband, was a fugitive from justice, had abandoned and separated himself from the applicant, and was furnishing no support either for herself or infant children; and that the order applied for was absolutely essential to their subsistence.

From the rulings of the court, adversely affecting his interests, plaintiff, having duly excepted, appealed.

King, Sapp & King, of Greensboro, for appellant.

A. W. Dunn, of Leaksville, and Brooks, Hines & Smith, of Greensboro, for Ethel K. Talley, intervener.

HOKE, J. [1] In the recent case of Tisdale v. Eubanks, 180 N. C. 153, 155, 104 S. E. 339, 11 A. L. R. 374, the court, in upholding the writ of attachment in an action for slander, had occasion to refer to the successive statutes controlling the matter, by which the lawful use of this writ has been continuously enlarged until under the latest amendment, Consolidated Statutes, § 798, subsec. 4, the right is extended to actions for "any injury to the person, caused by negligence or wrongful act," and it was there said that the history of this legislation and this, the latest amendment to the law, showed an evident intent on the part of the Legislature to broaden the right to this writ and make the same well-nigh coextensive with any well-grounded demand for judgment in personam. Under this, the correct interpretation, we are of opinion that our statute appertaining to attachments, from the language used and the purpose and policy of the Legislature as evinced in these various amendments, is sufficiently comprehensive to include the action for "causing the death of another by wrongful act neglect or default of another," as provided in section 160 of the Consolidated Statutes.

While we have repeatedly held, and the position is in accord with the authoritative cases on the subject elsewhere, that this law, commonly designated as the Lord Campbell's Act, has the effect of creating a new cause of action in the sense that such a suit could not be maintained at common law, it will appear from the better-considered decisions construing the statute, both in England and in this country, that its purpose was to withdraw claims of this kind from the effect and operation of the maxim, "Actio personalis moritur cum persona," and that the action did not thereby lose its identity, but that the basis of such a claim continued to be the wrongful injury to the person resulting in death. Applying the principle, though there are cases to the contrary, it has been very generally held that if, in case of willful injury causing the death, the defendant was acting in his necessary self-defense, or in case of negligence if the deceased at the time was guilty of contributory negligence or if the injured party had given a release or had been settled with for the injury during his life, either by adjustment inter partes or by suit, under the statute no recovery could be had for the death, thus showing that in case of death following a wrongful injury there were not two causes of action contemplated, but one, and that the "injury to the person" continued to be a constituent and essential feature of the action provided for, and so as stated coming under the broad and comprehensive terms of our law of attachment affording the remedy for "injury to the person by negligence or any wrongful act." Edwards v. Chemical Co., 170 N. C. 551, 87 S. E. 635, L. R. A. 1916D, 121; Mich. Central R. R. v. Vreeland, 227 U. S. 59-70, 33 Sup. Ct. 192, 57 L. Ed. 417, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 176; Lincoln v. Detroit, etc., R. R., 179 Mich. 189, 146 N. W. 405, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 710; Read v. Great Eastern, 3 L. R. 867-868, p. 555; Hecht v. R. R., 132 Ind. 507, 32 N. E. 302; Littlewood v. Mayor, 89 N. Y. 24, 42 Am. Rep. 271; Crapo v. City of Syracuse, 183 N. Y. 395, 76 N. E. 465; Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, § 124; 8 R. C. L. pp. 786-790.

In Edwards v. Chemical Co., holding that a judgment for the wrong, duly paid to the injured party in his life, would bar any action to recover for the death, after quoting from the opinion of Rapallo, Judge, in Littlewood v. Mayor, supra, it was said:

"These views of the learned judge, arising chiefly from the language of the statute, derive strong support from the suggestion that, although the statute may be considered in some respects as creating a new right of action, it has its foundation in a single wrong."

And in Vreeland's Case, supra, Associate Justice Lurton delivering the opinion:

"But as the foundation of the right of action is the original wrongful injury to the decedent, it has been generally held that the new action is a right dependent upon the existence of a right in the decedent."

And in Hecht v. Ohio Valley R. R., it was said, among other things:

"Although some items of evidence may be competent or even necessary in one case and not in the other, and the method of proof may differ, still the action in either case is based on the negligence of the defendant in causing the same and identical injury, and the damages in either case grow out of * * * such negligence."

It will be understood that we do not intend to qualify the principle upheld in our decisions, Causey v. R. R., 166 N. C. 5, 81 S. E. 917, L. R. A. 1915E, 1185, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 707, and others that the statute commonly known as Lord Campbell's Act creates a new cause of action; but we are of opinion, and so hold, that the action it does create is so involved in and dependent upon the injury to the person which results in death as to bring the same within the broad and comprehensive language of our statute on attachment, authorizing the issuance of the writ.

We do not consider it necessary or desirable to advert especially to the authorities cited by intervener tending to show that the wrongful causing of another's death is not included in the terms "injuries to the person." Some of them undoubtedly are in support of defendant's position, but the question as a rule was presented in facts differing from those of the instant case, and in the construction of statutes having terms of less comprehensive import and permitting other construction than our law as to writs of attachment.

[2, 3] While we have dealt somewhat at length with the ruling of the court vacating the writ because, as the record now appears, the right of plaintiff to further continue the present suit is dependent on its validity, we must not be understood that the intervener, Mrs. Talley, has the right to raise this question. Coming into court and claiming the property held by it, she submits her case to the court's jurisdiction, and the only question open to her is whether she has an interest in the property superior to that conferred by the writ of attachment. In a case at the present term, of Roseman Feed Co. v. Nashville Grain & Feed Co., 109 S. E. 881, it was very earnestly contended before us that an intervener could raise the question of the court's jurisdiction, and in disapproval of the position Stacy, Judge, delivering the opinion, said:

"This jurisdictional question, arising from an alleged want of proper service, is sought to be raised by the intervener after having taken the property under proper bonds" for its forthcoming. "We have held in Forbis v. Lumber Co., 165 N. C. 403, and cases cited therein, that this position is not open to appellant. It is entitled to be heard only upon one issue, viz.: Does the property attached belong to it [the intervener]? Bank v. Furniture, 120 N. C. 477."

[4] As to the rights of the interveners and on the facts as they now appear in the record, her claim is based on a preliminary judgment of the superior court of Rockingham county, purporting to be under section 1667, Consolidated Statutes, providing for an award of alimony without divorce; and we deem it not amiss to say that a perusal of this statute will disclose that the relief in such cases must be wrought by civil action and for the proper maintenance of which there must be, either personal service of summons on defendant within the jurisdiction, or voluntary appearance by him, or there must be at least constructive service by publication. Johnson v. Whilden, 166 N. C. 104, 81 S. E. 1057, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 783. And while the statute provides that an order for temporary support may be made in the cause without notice of such an application, where the defendant, having abandoned his wife, is absent from the state or is in parts unknown, etc., and our authorities seem to hold that as against such a defendant an award of alimony may be made effective against his property situated within the state without personal service and without an attachment levied (White v. White, 179 N. C. 592, 103 S. E. 216), it does not necessarily follow that such a judgment would prevail as against the lien of a valid attachment first levied in another court of concurrent or equal jurisdiction, and in any event, and as now advised, the rights of the parties presented in this litigation must be determined as the present suit and not otherwise. One superior court has no power to revoke or modify the others and judgment of another of which the latter has acquired and holds jurisdiction. Bear v. Cohen, 65 N. C. 411.

On the facts as now presented, this opinion will be certified that judgment vacating the attachment be reversed, the amount of plaintiff's damages be ascertained, and the issue then determined between the plaintiff and the intervener as to their respective rights and interests in the property levied on.
Reversed.

HOLMAN v. FARRELL. (No. 10753.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 1, 1921.)

1. Evidence \S 222(3), 471(5)—Testimony by witness to a statement by defendant held competent as an admission, and not a conclusion.

In replevin by an administrator to recover a ring which defendant claimed as a gift from deceased, a statement in an affidavit as to testimony of an absent witness that in an investigation as to what property the deceased had left he interviewed defendant, and that "she had admitted that deceased had only loaned it to her to wear as a friend, that they were not engaged," was improperly excluded as a mere conclusion and not testimony.

2. Continuance \S 26(5)—Party, believing that witness would attend without compulsion, not diligent.

A plaintiff, who did not avail himself of means of compelling his witnesses to attend when he might have done so, was not diligent in the sense of being entitled to continuance for the absent witnesses, though honestly convinced that they would attend without compulsion.

3. Evidence \S 317(1)—Details of conversation of witness and another held inadmissible, though he might testify he had received certain information.

Where in replevin for a ring which plaintiff claimed decedent had loaned to defendant, and which defendant claimed as a gift, an affidavit of an absent witness recited that in investigating what property deceased had left a hotel keeper had informed him that witness did not have all the property, and informed him that there was other property leading to discovery as to the ring the conversation between the witness and the person giving the information was not competent, though the fact of receiving the information might be shown.

Fraser and Watts, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas County Court of Richland County; M. S. Whaley, Judge.

Action by W. F. Holman, as administrator, against M. Eileen Farrell. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Holman & Holman, of Columbia, for appellant.

D. W. Robinson, of Columbia, for respondent.

GARY, C. J. This is an action in claim and delivery for a diamond ring. The complaint alleges that prior to the death of Dr. T. C. Homan, plaintiff's intestate, the defendant borrowed from him a valuable diamond ring, for the purpose of wearing the same and, upon demand, refuses to return it. The defendant denies that she borrowed the ring, but alleges that Dr. T. C. Holman gave it to her as an expression of the strong and cordial friendship that existed between them.

The following statements appear in the record: On the call of the case for trial, the attorneys for the plaintiff requested the court to continue the case, upon the ground of the absence of a material witness, Miss Cecil True, and also the absence of the witness, G. B. Holman. The plaintiff's attorney submitted a statement, that the witness, Miss True, would, if present, have testified:

"I was very well acquainted with Dr. T. C. Holman, deceased, and with the defendant, Miss Eileen Farrell. We went together on many and numerous occasions. That we were all together at the Jefferson hotel, in the city of Columbia, one evening, and Dr. Holman offered me his diamond ring to wear, which I refused, when the defendant, Miss Eileen Farrell, requested him to let her see the ring, which he handed to her, and she placed it on her finger, and did not return it to him, nor did he give it to her for any other purpose than for her to look at it; that Miss Farrell's statement that Dr. Holman gave her the ring at her residence is untrue; that on several occasions after that time, she was in the company of the defendant and Dr. Holman, and that she knows of her own knowledge that Dr. Holman tried to get the ring back from the defendant, and the defendant through some excuse managed to keep the ring until after the death of Dr. Holman."

Whereupon the following occurred:

"Mr. Robinson: Your honor, as to the affidavit of one of these, Mr. G. B. Holman, they have a doctor's certificate that he is not able to be here. I am willing to admit that if he were here he would swear to that, but it is subject to the question of competency.

"As to the other, of some lady that lives here in town, there is no excuse for her, except that statement that he issued a subpoena for her and the sheriff cannot find her."

"Mr. Holman: Your honor, this lady living right in town, and, I having talked with her last week, I presume that she would be here. I turned over the subpoena to the sheriff this morning.

"The Court: That is your risk. You are too late. If Mr. Robinson does not choose to admit it, that is your look out.

"Mr. Robinson: I am not willing to admit it.

"The Court: Then we will have to go ahead.

"The affidavit of G. B. Holman was offered in lieu of his testimony, which affidavit is as follows: 'Personally appeared before me G. B. Holman, who, being duly sworn, says that he is the father of Dr. Capers Holman, now deceased. That W. F. Holman, my son, administered upon the estate of Dr. Capers Holman, deceased and in an effort to secure all of his property, I was at St. Joseph's Hotel, Orangeburg, S. C., some time after the death of my son, getting up what property he had there. At that time I received information from the wife of the proprietor of that hotel that I did not have all the property of Dr. Holman, and upon investigation found that there was a diamond ring belonging to Dr. Holman that he had loaned to Miss Eileen Farrell, of Columbia, to wear; that the undersigned saw Miss Eileen Farrell, and she admitted that Capers (Dr. Capers Holman) had only loaned it to her to wear as a friend; that they were not engaged; that Miss Farrell showed me the ring upon her finger, but stated that she would not give it to me. The above statement is true of my own knowledge.

Upon objection made in due time, the court ruled that the portion of the affidavit in italics could not be received in evidence. Counsel for defendant agreed to admit the balance of the affidavit. And the following colloquy occurred in reference thereto.

"Mr. Holman: We offer this statement.

"Mr. Robinson: Has your honor passed on it?

"The Court: No. Do you want to object to it now or wait until he comes to that?

"Mr. Robinson: I want to state my grounds and have it ruled out before it is read. It starts with what some proprietor of a hotel told him. And that further part down there where he says that the defendant admitted. Now, what she said he can testify to. Her admissions of conclusions is not testimony."

The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

The first question for consideration is whether there was error on the part of his honor the presiding judge in refusing the motion for a continuance.

The defendant's attorney interposed no objections whatever to the statement, as shown by the physician's certificate, that the witness G. B. Holman was not able to attend the trial, and stated that he was willing to admit that, if the witness was present, he would testify in accordance with his affidavit, but reserved the right to object to the competency of the testimony, on the ground that the admission alleged to have been made by the defendant was a mere conclusion and not testimony.

[1] The affidavit of G. B. Holman shows that upon receiving information that he did not have all the property belonging to Dr. Holman's estate he made an investigation, and found that there was a diamond ring, which he had loaned to the defendant. The words, "she admitted that Capers (Dr. Capers Holman), had only loaned it to her to wear as a friend," when considered in connection with the other parts of the affidavit, are not only an admission as to the correctness of the information revealed by the investigation, but likewise specify what that information was. His honor the presiding judge erred, therefore, in ruling that they constituted a mere conclusion.

Furthermore, the presiding judge erroneously exercised his discretion when he did not grant the continuance on account of the absence of Miss Cecil True. She lived in Columbia, and when she left the state failed to notify the plaintiff's attorney that she would not be present at the trial. There was no doubt that her testimony was very material, and could not be supplied by other witnesses. Under the rulings of the presiding judge it was impossible for the plaintiff to win the case.

As the plaintiff's attorney was not guilty of any negligence whatever, justice required a postponement of the trial.

The opinion of Mr. Justice PURDY changes in part the result herein announced. The exceptions assigning error in the ruling as to continuance are overruled, and those in regard to the admissibility of certain testimony are sustained.

New trial.

COTHRAN, J., concurs.

PURDY, A. A. J. (concurring). [2] The plaintiff could have availed himself of the means provided for compelling the attendance of the witness, but failed to do so, and no matter how honestly he was convinced that the witness would attend without availing himself of such means, he took the risk of such nonattendance, and the interests of the public are superior to the private inconvenience growing out of it. The action of the trial judge in this respect should not be disturbed, unless there appears to be a clear abuse of discretion. His sole interest is to promote the public welfare and administer justice impartially. I do not think that there has been an abuse of his discretion in this case, and this exception should not be sustained.

[3] In reference to the affidavit of G. B. Holman a part of it is clearly incompetent. Had he been present, he would not have been allowed to have given the conversation between himself and the person who gave him the information, but could only state that he had received information from the wife of the proprietor of the hotel, and so much of that part of the affidavit would have been competent.

As to so much of the affidavit to which objection was made because it was a conclusion, I think that it is more than a conclusion, and is in the nature of a statement, and should have been admitted, and that his honor the trial judge erred in not admitting it, and that his judgment on this exception should be reversed.

Reversed.

FRASER, J. I dissent. This is an action in claim and delivery to recover a diamond ring. Dr. T. C. Holman was the owner of a diamond ring. Dr. Holman died, and after his death the ring was found by the plaintiff, the administrator of his estate, in the possession of Miss M. Eileen Farrell. Miss Farrell claims to be the owner of the ring, as a gift from Dr. Holman, and refused to deliver the possession. When the case was called for trial, the plaintiff moved for a continuance, on the ground of the absence of a material witness. The motion was refused, and this refusal of a continuance forms the basis of the first exception.

I. The motion was in the discretion of the trial judge, and we do not see that he abused his discretion. There was no attempt to subpoena the witness until the day of the trial. The plaintiff claims that he did not know that the witness was going away. It was his duty to know that the witness was not going away, or to take no chances by issuing a timely subpoena. This exception should be overruled.

II. The plaintiff attempted to introduce a statement of an absent witness in which the witness stated that Miss Farrell had admitted that Dr. Holman had only lent the ring to her. This part of the statement was stricken out, because it was a conclusion and not statement of fact. His honor was right. One man might consider a statement an admission and another might not. There was no attempt to show the words used, and this exception should be overruled.

III. The third and last exception contains about two pages of Judge Whaley's charge and assigns two errors:

(a) "That said charge was prejudicial to the plaintiff, in that it conveyed to the jury the impression that the mere passing by manual delivery of personal property, from one person to another, would, in law, constitute a gift without other facts to establish the same." His honor charged:

"What were the circumstances surrounding it? If it was such that it was a gift, why, that gift cannot be rescinded. But if those circumstances were reasonably sure that there was a stipulation between the parties that it was to be a loan, then it would be a loan, and it would take something thereafter to turn it into a gift."

This assignment of error should not be sustained.

(b) The second assignment of error is that his honor charged the jury that the nature of Miss Farrell's possession was fixed at the time of delivery. This was more favorable to the plaintiff than he was entitled to. If Dr. Holman intended to give the ring to

Miss Farrell at the time of the delivery, then nothing that he could do subsequently could convert it into a loan. If he intended at the time of the delivery to make a loan and retained the title in himself, he could subsequently release his title and convert the loan into a gift. This assignment of error should not be sustained.

I think the judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

(No. 10767.)

1. Partition ⚡62—In partition answer denying complaint and alleging title in defendant puts plaintiffs' title in issue.

In action for partition, answer denying each and every allegation of the complaint not specifically admitted and alleging possession as owner in fee simple, and that plaintiffs have no right, title, or interest, puts in question the title of plaintiffs.

2. Slaves ⚡25—Evidence held sufficient to prove cohabitation of slaves as husband and wife.

Evidence held sufficient to prove cohabitation of slaves as husband and wife.

3. Marriage ⚡45—Certificate of marriage by minister not bound to keep record is not admissible.

If not bound to keep a record of marriage ceremonies, a minister's certificate is merely a statement of a private person, and not admissible in evidence.

4. Marriage ⚡45—If certificate of marriage is admitted, identity of parties named therein must be established.

In proving a marriage, if the certificate of marriage is admitted, the identity of the parties named therein must be established.

5. Slaves ⚡25—Cohabitation of man slave and woman slave before emancipation constituted lawful marriage.

Under the Enabling Act of December 21, 1865, and subsequent acts, the cohabitation of a man slave and a woman slave before emancipation and continuance of the relation at the time of the passage of the act constituted lawful marriage.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Orangeburg County; I. W. Bowman, Judge.

Action by Henrietta Frederick and others against W. C. Culler. From a judgment for defendant founded on the report of a master in chancery, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Following is the master's report and the judgment based thereon:

This action is brought by the plaintiffs, claiming to be certain of the heirs at law of George Baxter, deceased, for the partition of a tract of 30 acres of land situate in this county of which it is alleged the said George Baxter died seized and possessed, the plaintiffs alleging also that the defendant, W. C. Culler, has purchased the interest of Bettie Baxter, the widow of the said George Baxter in the said real estate, and that the plaintiffs and the defendants are tenants in common as to the same.

[1] The defendant makes answer denying each and every allegation of the complaint not specifically admitted in said answer, and alleges that he is in possession as the owner in fee simple of the premises described in the complaint, and that the plaintiffs have no right, title, or interest therein. The answer of the defendant therefore puts in question the title of the plaintiffs to any interest whatever in said real estate.

I have held reference in the action and taken such testimony as was submitted by the respective parties, and they have been as fully heard as they desired to be; and, from the testimony taken, the facts are as follows:

George Baxter, late of the county of Orangeburg, in said state, departed this life intestate about the year 1914, and it is not questioned that he was the owner in fee simple at the time of his death of the real estate described in the complaint in this action, which contains 30 acres more or less and situate in Goodland township in said county and state. He left surviving him a widow, Bettie Baxter, and the plaintiffs contend that they are the lawful children and grandchildren of the said intestate, and are therefore entitled to their shares in the property in question as heirs and distributees of his estate, and they make no question as to the share of the widow, Bettie Baxter, in the property, and claim that the defendant is a tenant in common with them as to the said property to the extent of the share of the said Bettie Baxter therein. The defendant, however, is in the possession of said real estate, claims to be the owner of the same in fee simple, and, as has been stated above, he denies that the plaintiffs have any right, interest, or title in the property. In other words, he disputes the contention of the plaintiffs that they are the lawful children and grandchildren of the said George Baxter, and thus makes a clear cut issue as to the facts upon which they based their claims of interest in the property in question.

[2] The said George Baxter was born a negro slave and belonged to Jacob Stroman prior to the war between the states and up to the time of emancipation and during all this time he lived on the plantation of said Stroman. There was also a woman slave on Stroman's place and belonging to him called Dolly, and on the plantation of Gabriel Summers a woman slave named Bettie, who was the property of the said Summers. Bettie had four children, Henrietta, Aaron, Maxie, and Sam. The first three named are plaintiffs in this case. Sam died, leaving two children, Luther and George Baxter, who are also plaintiffs herein. Henrietta and Aaron were born during slavery, and Maxie and Sam after the war. George was the reputed father of all Betty's children named above. He was also the father of Frank, a son of Dolly, born in 1854. Dolly also had children previous to the birth of Frank, the reputed father of same being Jerry Guignard. There is no evidence, however, that Dolly lived with Jerry at any time, and, although George had several children by Bettie, it does not appear that he made his home with her or lived with her regularly. On the other hand, the testimony is full and to my mind conclusive that George lived continuously in the same house with Dolly from the time of the birth of their son, Frank, until her death, which was shortly after 1900. On the old plantation of their master, Jacob Stroman, before and during the war and then after the war still on the same place until a home was given to them by the family of his old master, George and Dolly made their home together and also together moved to Orangeburg and resided there for several years.

It is understood that there was frequently no formal marriage ceremony among slaves, but the consent of the master to the cohabitation together of a man and woman slave was regarded sufficient to consider them as husband and wife. It appears, however, that in the case at bar there was a formal ceremony of marriage of George and Dolly at Rocky Swamp church some time before the birth of their son, Frank, which we have notice was in 1854, and there can be no doubt that during all the years that followed and down to the time of the death of Dolly they lived together as husband and wife, and that this relation was understood and recognized by all colored and white who knew them best. The above facts in reference to George and Dolly negative very largely the testimony taken in the case with reference to the claim of the plaintiffs as to the relationship of George and Bettie. That he had children by her is not denied, but the preponderating weight of the testimony is that they never cohabited together as husband and wife, and were not so regarded. Bettie lived in slavery on the plantation of her master, Gabriel Summers, until freedom, and during the same period, as we have observed, George lived on the place of their master, Jacob Stroman, cohabiting there with Dolly, who was recognized as his wife, and their son, Frank, lived with them from his birth until some time after the war. In this connection there is another circumstance which strikes me as suggestive. Bettie was known as Bettie Jones when a slave, and for several years after the war, and some of the witnesses in the case allude to her by that name in the testimony. When or how she got the surname Jones has not been explained. She had children by George Baxter during slavery and after the war, and, if she was a wife to George and so recognized, it is strange that she should have had the surname Jones, instead of Baxter, and that the fact that she bore the name of Jones when she had children by George Baxter strengthens the conclusions that, whatever may have been her relations with him, she was not his wife, and the fact that all this time George was cohabiting and living regularly with and in the same house with Dolly, who was commonly regarded his wife, stamped his relationship with Betty as altogether one of concubinage. But there is a claim made on behalf of the plaintiffs that Betty Jones was married to George Baxter some time after the war, and I have carefully considered the testimony bearing on this contention.

[3,4] One of the witnesses, M. J. Frederick, who is the son of the plaintiff Henrietta Frederick, was offered to prove, among other things, the contents of a certificate he says he obtained from Rev. S. B. Sawyer concerning such a marriage, it being stated that the said certificate was lost. This testimony was objected to at the time, but it was taken subject to the objection, and I then had doubts as to its admissibility and am now satisfied that it should not be received. In the first place, it was not shown that the minister who furnished the certificate was not living. If still alive, he could have been examined as to the fact of the marriage, or another certificate, if admissible, could have been procured. If dead, the record of the marriage, if he was required to keep a record of the same, could have been obtained. If not bound to keep a record of same, his certificate, whether he was alive or dead, would have been merely the statement of a private person and would be rejected. 1 Green on Ev. § 498. And, even if the certificate was such a one as was admissible, the identity of the parties named in the same would have to be established. Three other witnesses touch upon this alleged marriage in their testimony. One of them, Edith Bell, says she was the sister of Bettie Jones, and that in slavery time she heard George ask the master and missus for her and they gave her to him, and she also states that he afterwards lived with Bettie, which is not in accord with the facts, as have been found above; and this witness also stated in the first part of her testimony that she did not know about the marriage of Bettie, and later on in her testimony remembered that it did take place on the Rutland place, where Bettie was living, but she does not mention who performed the ceremony or any of the circumstances attending the ceremony or any of the circumstances attending the marriage. Another witness, Amelia Woodward, testified that she was present at the marriage of George Baxter and Bettie Jones by Rev. S. B. Sawyer at his place the second year after emancipation, but that she did not know either of the parties to this marriage, and never saw them any time afterwards, which she qualified afterwards by a statement that she saw George Baxter afterwards coming by home going to Orangeburg. Eliza Johnson also testified on the subject of the marriage of George Baxter and Bettie Jones by Rev. S. B. Sawyer at his place about the second year after freedom, but she was a "don't know" witness, which impresses one on the reading of her testimony of nearly four pages. The testimony on this subject, it will be observed, is very weak. Betty's sister, Edith Bell, speaks of it as on the Rutland place, and the other witnesses say it was on the place of the officiating minister, Mr. Sawyer. As it is claimed that the marriage is two years after freedom, it appears to me that it can make no difference whether it was had or not. Should it be regarded as important, all the testimony is before the court. It has already been referred to that George Baxter died about the year 1914 and he left a widow also named Bettie, who married him after the death of Dolly, and is still living.

In February, 1915, an action was commenced in this Court by one A. C. Fulmer, against Bettie Baxter and Frank Baxter as the heirs at law and distributees of George Baxter, deceased, for the foreclosure of a mortgage of real estate alleged to have been executed by the said George Baxter in his lifetime, and which was then held by the said A. C. Fulmer, the said mortgage being a lien upon the said real estate mentioned and described in the complaint in this action, and such proceedings were had in the said cause as resulted in a judgment of this court, which is dated August 23, 1915, whereby a sale was ordered and adjudged of the said mortgaged premises, the sale to be made by the judge of probate of this county as special referee upon the terms set forth in the said judgment order, and the proceeds of said sale were to be applied to the payment of the costs and expenses of said action and then to the payment of the plaintiff's mortgage debt. The said judgment order was thereafter modified upon the application of D. O. Herbert, and he was made a party defendant, and provision was made for the payment to him of a mortgage held by him upon the said property from the proceeds of the sale thereof, and the balance of the proceeds after the payments of all costs and the expenses and the mortgage debts of the said A. C. Fulmer and D. O. Herbert was directed to be held subject to the further order of the court. Under the said judgment order as so modified, a sale was held as directed therein, and at such sale the mortgaged real estate, being the same property involved in this action, was sold to the defendant, W. C. Culler, who complied and received a title for the said property. The proceeds of said sale were applied to the payment of the costs and expenses of said action, and then to the payment of the mortgage debts of Fulmer and Herbert above mentioned, and under further order of the court the surplus proceeds, after such payment, were paid to the said Bettie Baxter and Frank Baxter, one-third of the same to Bettie Baxter and two-thirds to Frank Baxter; they being regarded the heirs at law and the distributees of the before-mentioned George Baxter, deceased.

Having ascertained from the testimony what in my judgment are the facts of the case, it remains to indicate the conclusions which should follow, and these will be briefly stated.

The defendant being in possession of the real estate, the subject of the action, under a claim of title, makes it incumbent upon the plaintiffs to establish their title to the interest claimed by them in the property. This they have attempted to do, basing their claim upon the contention that they are the lawful children and grandchildren of said George Baxter, and, together with his surviving widow, the heirs at law and distributees of his estate. The question, therefore, is have they made good their contention. The case is one of the relics of slavery as it existed in this state over a half century ago, and the testimony in its sweep therefore goes back to the period of the war of the '60's and before that time.

[5] The emancipation of slaves which followed in the wake of that war made it necessary to adjust the social order prevailing among this people, and the Legislature of the state, looking to that end, promptly enacted into law the Act of December 21, 1865 (13 St. at Large, p. 291), by which the relations of husband and wife among persons of color was established, and those then living as such were declared to be husband and wife, and every colored child thereafter born was declared to be the legitimate child of his mother and also of his father, if he had been acknowledged by such father.

This act and other kindred laws on the same subject naturally found their way into the courts for construction, and a line of decisions, beginning in 1877 with Davenport v. Caldwell, 10 S. C. 317, and coming down to Mims v. Jones, 107 S. C. 87, 91 S. E. 987, decided in 1916, has, it seems, pretty well settled the law of this state on the subject. A review of these cases would be interesting, but it is unnecessary for the purposes of this case. Sufficient to say that they enforced the provisions of the Enabling Act of December, 1865, and uniformly hold that, where slaves entered the relation of husband and wife before emancipation and continued to occupy such relations at the time of the passage of the Enabling Act of December, 1865, these relations became effective as constituting a lawful marriage, and their children were entitled to inherit as though born in lawful wedlock. Applying this rule to the case at bar, the preponderating weight of the testimony as it is early set forth in the foregoing statement of facts, it is against the contention of the plaintiffs, and they must fail in their action. They are the issue of concubinic relations of George Baxter and Bettie Jones, who was not known or recognized as his wife. On the other hand, it appears that George Baxter in slavery time was married in form to Dolly, a slave of the same master, and lived with her as his wife on their master's place until emancipation and afterwards until she died, and was living with her at the time of the act of December, 1865, and there was born to them, so living together as man and wife, a son, Frank Baxter, who lived with his parents, recognized by them as their son, until after the war, and is still living. The suggestion that is made that George Baxter was duly married to Bettie Jones fixed the time of such alleged marriage after the passage of the Enabling Act of December, 1865. If then had, under the circumstances of this case, it would have been void. Mims v. Jones, supra. It is unnecessary to consider the effect of the judgment and sale under which the defendant, W. C. Culler, purchased the real estate involved, as the main question in the case is determined against the plaintiffs, and is decisive of the case, and their complaint should be dismissed with costs. I submit herewith the minutes of the references held, together with the testimony taken.

M. J. Frederick, of Sumter, and Jacob Moorer, of Orangeburg, for appellants.

Wolfe & Berry, of Orangeburg, for respondent.

WATTS, J. For the reasons stated by A. C. Dibble, Esq., master, and confirmed by his honor Judge Bowman, it is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

CITIZENS' NAT. BANK OF CONNELLSVILLE et al. v. HARRISON-DODDRIDGE COAL & COKE CO. et al. (No. 4059.)(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 29, 1921.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Mortgages \S 244(3)—Vendor and purchaser \S 265(4)—Assignee of secured paper held to have preference over original creditor, subsequent assignee, and subsequent purchaser of security for value; "goods and chattels."

An assignment of a note or bond secured by a deed of trust, mortgage, or vendor's lien and described in the instrument is not recordable, and the assignee thereof, without having had it recorded, has superior right to the original creditor, a subsequent assignee and a subsequent purchaser for value, of the property on which it is secured, in the absence of conduct on the part of such assignee, amounting to an estoppel.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Goods.]

2. Mortgages \S 249(3)—Vendor and purchaser \S 265(4)—Deed of trust, mortgage, or vendor's lien held constructive notice of lien as against subsequent assignees and purchasers.

Until released by the assignee of such a note or bond, the deed of trust, mortgage, or vendor's lien is constructive notice of the lien by which it is secured, as against subsequent assignees and purchasers, notwithstanding a release thereof by the original creditor, and a court of equity will set aside such release on a bill by the assignee for enforcement of his equitable right to the lien.

3. Vendor and purchaser \S 230(3)—Subsequent purchaser of incumbered real estate must ascertain whether liens have been paid.

A subsequent purchaser of real estate incumbered by such an instrument mentioning and describing notes or bonds as being secured by it, in order to be protected from them in his purchase, must ascertain that they have been paid or surrendered, else he purchases the property at his peril.

4. Mortgages \S 231—Equitable title by implication need not be recorded under statute.

The statute requiring every contract for the conveyance of real estate or a term therein of more than five years, every deed conveying any such estate or term, and every deed of gift or deed of trust or mortgage to be recorded, Code, c. 74, \S 4 and 5 (secs. 3834, 3835), does not contemplate recordation of an acquisition of title or right in real estate arising only in equity by mere implication from an express contract of assignment of a chose in action, nor the assignment of a chose in action to which equity annexes such right. It is limited to contracts, deeds, and other instruments passing such title or interest by express contract or conveyance.

5. Mortgages \S 231, 249(3)—Assignment must be recorded; subsequent purchaser without notice takes precedence over assignee's right where release, but not assignment, recorded.

An assignment of a mortgage, as contradistinguished from an assignment of a note or bond mentioned, described, and secured in it, is a conveyance of real estate or a contract for such conveyance, the former, if by deed, and the latter, if not; and, for protection against the mortgagee and a subsequent purchaser of the mortgaged property for value, the assignee must cause it to be admitted to record. If, in the event of his failure to do so, the original mortgagee has released the mortgage, and the release has been recorded, a subsequent purchase of the property for value and without actual notice of the assignment takes precedence over the right of the assignee.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Harrison County.

Suit by the Citizens' National Bank of Connellsville and others against the Harrison-Doddridge Coal & Coke Company, the Commonwealth Trust Company of Pittsburgh, and others. Decree for plaintiffs, and last-named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Neely & Lively, of Fairmont, for appellant.
P. J. Crogan, of Kingwood, and Starling, Higbee & Matthews, of Uniontown, Pa., for appellees.

POFFENBARGER, J. The decree complained of on this appeal determines questions of priority between the Citizens' National Bank of Connellsville, assignee of notes secured by a deed of trust, and also of an interest in a mortgage, on the one hand, and the Commonwealth Trust Company of Pittsburgh, a subsequent mortgagee of the same property on which the assigned debts were secured, on the other, in favor of the bank, and cancels releases of the deed of trust and prior mortgage executed by the original creditor.

The property involved is about 30,000 acres of coal made up of numerous small tracts consolidated, one-sixth of which was owned by Joseph E. Barnes, one-half by Alfred J. Cochran, and the residue by James R. Barnes. After Joseph E. Barnes and Cochran had incumbered their interests by the deed of trust and prior mortgage, all of the interests in the coal became vested in Josiah V. Thompson, who organized a corporation known as the Harrison-Doddridge Coal & Coke Company, and conveyed the entire body of coal to it. That company executed the subsequent mortgage upon the entire property to the Commonwealth Trust Company to secure an issue of bonds amounting to $4,000,000.

ed a mortgage by which he conveyed his undivided one-sixth of the property to Jasper Augustine to secure a debt of $150,000, evidenced by the provisions and covenants of the mortgage, and not otherwise. No notes are mentioned or described in it. By a formal deed dated October 26, 1907, and properly acknowledged, Augustine assigned four-fifteenths of the mortgage to F. E. Markell, who is shown to have been the president of said bank, to secure notes executed by Joseph E. Barnes and others, on which he was liable as indorser and otherwise, amounting in the aggregate to about $40,000, according to a recital in the instrument. Both the mortgage and assignment were duly recorded in Harrison and Doddridge counties, in which the coal was situated, long before the mortgage to the Commonwealth Trust Company was executed.

On December 11, 1907, Cochran conveyed his undivided one-half of the property to John Bassel, trustee, to secure his twenty notes for the sum of $10,000 each, made and delivered to Augustine. This instrument was likewise recorded in both of said counties. On the day of its execution Cochran assigned four of the notes to Markell, as collateral security for the same notes for security of which the Barnes mortgage was partially assigned, two $16,000 notes and one $18,000 note, held by Markell for the bank, none of which have been paid, and all of which were duly presented for payment and protested for nonpayment.

Augustine, on January 14, 1910, executed releases of both the mortgage and deed of trust, which were recorded in both counties December 21, 1910. He swears he executed them by mistake, superinduced by misrepresentation and fraud on the part of Thompson, who, before the date of these transactions, acquired the property subject to the indebtedness thereon. Thereafter, July 26, 1912, Thompson conveyed it to the Harrison-Doddridge Coal & Coke Company, and on August 1, 1912, that company executed said $4,000,000 mortgage.

As the notes secured by the deed of trust and the mortgage differ in point of status, the assignment of the former not having been recorded, while that of the other was, and the deed of trust being a mere security for a debt, while the mortgage vested the legal title to the property in the mortgagee, they will be separately considered.

[1] A debt secured by a deed of trust is a mere chose in action, wherefore an assignment thereof is not required to be recorded. It is not included in the terms "goods and chattels," as used in section 5, c. 74 (sec. 3835), of the Code. Turk v. Skiles, 45 W. Va. 82, 87, 30 S. E. 234; Fleshman v. Hoylman, 27 W. Va. 728; Tingle v. Fisher, 20 W. Va. 498; Bank v. Gettinger, 3 W. Va. 317; Kirkland, Chase & Co. v. Brune, 31 Grt.

(Va.) 126. In this state and Virginia this doctrine has been enunciated, in most instances, in controversies between claimants of the secured debt, or between the assignee and the debtor, but it may have some bearing upon the relative rights of the assignee and a purchaser of the property upon which the debt is secured, taking it after a release by the trust creditor.

The original trust creditor, after having assigned the debt, cannot validly release the lien and thus destroy the right of his assignee therein. Fleshman v. Hoylman, cited; Taylor v. Godfrey, 62 W. Va. 677, 59 S. E. 631; 2 Jones on Mortgages, § 957. This rule is applicable to judgments and mortgages securing payment of notes and bonds. Crumlish v. Railroad Co. and Fidelity Co. v. Railroad Co., 32 W. Va. 244, 9 S. E. 180; Clarke v. Hogeman, 13 W. Va. 718; First National Bank v. McGraw, 85 W. Va. 298, 311, 101 S. E. 474.

[2, 3] Upon the inquiry as to the effect of a release by the original trust creditor upon the relative rights of the assignee and a purchaser of the property upon which the debt is secured, without notice of the assignment and in reliance upon the recorded release, the propositions above stated are not decisive nor strongly persuasive. The distinction between two claimants of the secured debt or the debtor and an assignee of the debt, on the one hand, and a purchaser of the property on which it was secured and an assignee, on the other, is very clear. The subjects of controversy or conflicting claims, though related, are entirely different. To the purchaser the recorded deed of trust is constructive notice, as is also the release. If the release is as broad in its scope as the deed of trust and specifically covers all of its possible elements, the purchaser ought to be protected by it, and this view is sustained by authority. The vendor's lien involved in Turk v. Skiles, 45 W. Va. 82, 30 S. E. 234, described no note for the unpaid purchase money, although one had been executed. The vendor holding that note joined the vendee in the execution of a deed of trust on the land, and thus released or conveyed his lien to the trustee and creditor in the deed of trust, and then assigned the note. Upon this state of facts, the trust creditor, being in law a purchaser, was held to have a right superior to that of the assignee of the note, and this conclusion was based largely upon the fact that the reservation of the vendor's lien did not mention the note, and, for that reason, gave no notice of its existence. The only debt disclosed by the record, the obligation evidenced by the deed, was released, and the purchaser was under no duty to look beyond it. Such also was the holding in Bank v. Harman, 75 Va. 604, notwithstanding the unmentioned note had been assigned before the vendor released his contract by a sale of the land to a third party and a conveyance made by his vendee at his instance. If, in these cases, the existence of the notes had been disclosed by the record or otherwise and brought to the attention of the purchaser, the assignees would no doubt have been accorded right superior to that of the purchasers. That is the import of the argument found in the opinions, and it seems to rest upon sound reason. A purchaser is bound to take notice of everything the record discloses. When a lien secures notes or bonds, he knows they are assignable and may have been assigned. Hence, if he relies upon a release by the original creditor and looks no further, he closes his eyes to the probability that some of the notes or all of them may be unpaid and in the hands of assignees. The deed of trust is not, in such case, the primary evidence of the debt, and the release constitutes no certain proof that such evidence, the note or bond, has been surrendered. He must ascertain if the original creditor still has the notes or whether they have been paid.

In jurisdictions in which an assignment of the deed of trust or mortgage is not required to be recorded, the assignee of the note or bond, under such circumstances, is protected, and the purchaser takes the property subject to his right. Bamberger v. Geiser, 24 Or. 203, 33 Pac. 609; Lee v. Clark, 89 Mo. 556, 1 S. W. 142; Trust Co. v. Shaw, 5 Sawy. 340, Fed. Cas. No. 10,556; Reeves v. Hayes, 95 Ind. 521; James v. Morey, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 246, 14 Am. Dec. 475; Dixon v. Hunter, 57 Ind. 278; Hasselman v. McKernan, 50 Ind. 441; People's Trust Co. v. Tonkonogy, 144 App. Div. (N. Y.) 333, 128 N. Y. Supp. 1055; Quimby v. Williams, 67 N. H. 489, 41 Atl. 862, 68 Am. St. Rep. 685; Wilson v. Kimball, 27 N. H. 300; Singleton v. Singleton, 60 S. C. 216, 38 S. E. 462. For other cases see 5 Ann. Cas. 339, note. An overwhelming weight of authority stands in favor of this proposition, and it follows that, in so far as the decree accords priority to the bank in respect of the four $10,000 notes, it is correct and irreversible. Recordation of the assignment of the notes was not required and they were described in the deed of trust.

To bring the assignment of the mortgage within the requirements of the recording acts, and thus give force and effect to a recorded assignment thereof, the distinction between a mortgage and a deed of trust, in point of character, is relied upon. It is contended that, to give it effect as against a subsequent purchaser for value and without notice, the assignment must be recorded, because it is a conveyance of an estate in land, and therefore comes within the statute. Of course, a mortgage vests the legal title conditionally in the mortgagee, while a deed of trust puts it in a trustee. At common law, upon a default in payment of the amount due upon a mortgage, the title vests unconditionally in the mortgagee, subject only to an equity of redemption in the mortgagor, of which the law takes no notice. In case of default in payment of a debt secured by a deed of trust, no change occurs in the title. The property merely becomes liable to sale under the power of sale conferred upon the trustee. This difference, substantial and important in some respects, does not justify a distinction between a mortgage and a deed of trust in the construction of the recording statute. A trust creditor is a purchaser within the meaning of that statute. The estate in the property is held by the trustee for his benefit, just as firmly and completely as a mortgagee would hold it. He has the equitable estate within his power, through the trustee's possession of the legal title, for his use. That amounts to an interest in the property, and an assignment of it as much a conveyance of land as is an assignment of a mortgage. An assignment by a trust creditor would not pass the legal title, as an assignment of a mortgage would, but conveyances of equitable title are as clearly within the recording acts as conveyances of legal title.

But for statutory modification of the common law respecting mortgages, the contention for distinction between assignments of deeds of trust and mortgages might be forceful in this connection. As to this, it is unnecessary to express an opinion, beyond the suggestion just made by way of argument. At common law a mortgagor, after having made default, vesting the legal title in the mortgagee absolutely and unconditionally, could not reacquire it by mere payment and the taking of a simple release. To obtain it, he was required to go into equity by bill for a decree restoring it by conveyance or otherwise, or to take a voluntary reconveyance from the mortgagee. Jones, Mort. (7th Ed.) § 889, citing numerous authorities. This is no longer necessary. By force of the statute (sections 1 to 4 of chapter 76, inclusive [secs. 3858-3861]), the estate is revested in the mortgagor by the signing and acknowledgment of a release. The effect of this is to make a mortgage a mere security for the mortgage debt. That the release statute applies to mortgages is clear. The lien of a mortgage is a lien "created by conveyance," mentioned in section 1. Section 4 provides that, by execution of the release, the lien "shall be discharged and extinguished, and the estate, of whatever kind, bound or affected thereby, shall be deemed to be vested in the former owner or those claiming under him, as if such lien had never existed."

There may be a difference between the assignment of the note or bond secured by a deed of trust or a mortgage and assignment of the lien itself, or rather of the deed of trust or mortgage. In the former case the note or bond is the immediate and direct subject of the contract and the assignment carries the security, only in equity, not at law. The assignee obtains no legal interest in the land. He obtains a mere equitable interest in the mortgage, enforceable only in the name of the holder thereof. Clark v. Havard, 122 Ga. 273, 50 S. E. 108; Kleeman v. Frisbie, 63 Ill. 482; Grassly v. Reinback, 4 Ill. App. 341; Warren v. Homestead, 33 Me. 256; Barnes v. Boardman, 149 Mass. 106, 21 N. E. 308, 3 L. R. A. 785; Olcott v. Crittenden, 68 Mich. 230, 36 N. W. 41; Bailey v. Winn, 101 Mo. 649, 12 S. W. 1045; McCamant v. Roberts, 87 Tex. 241, 27 S. W. 86; Jones, Mort. (7th Ed.) § 818. In equity an assignment of the debt is an assignment of the security. Machir v. Sehon, 14 W. Va. 777, 783; James v. Burbridge, 33 W. Va. 272, 276, 10 S. E. 396; Jenkins v. Hawkins, 34 W. Va. 799, 12 S. E. 1090; Tingle v. Fisher, 20 W. Va. 497; McClintic v. Wise, 25 Grat. 453, 454, 18 Am. Rep. 694. There seems to be no exception to this rule, in the absence of a statute modifying the common law. It follows that an assignment of a mortgage carries the legal title, while an assignment of the note or bond secured by it does not. Likewise the assignment of a deed of trust may carry an equitable interest in the land, by direct contract, while an assignment of the note or bond secured by it merely vests right in the assignee to invoke the jurisdiction of a court of equity to give him the benefit of the security. However that may be, he certainly does not obtain the benefit of the security by direct contract. It comes to him by mere implication, and it may well be said that the recording statute embraces only direct conveyances, those made by express contract, and not those effected by implication. Here is found a very substantial ground for the view that an express assignment of the lien, the mortgage, or deed of trust is recordable, while an assignment of the note or bond it secures is not. Whether an express assignment of a lien is recordable and must be recorded for protection of the assignee against other creditors and subsequent purchasers for value and without notice seems never to have been a subject of inquiry or determination in this state or in Virginia.

[4] It falls within the terms of the recording statute. Section 4 of chapter 74 (sec. 3834) Code, makes every "contract in writing, * * * made for the conveyance or sale of real estate, or a term therein of more than five years," as valid as if it were a deed conveying the "estate or interest embraced in the contract." Section 5 of that chapter requires "every such contract, every deed conveying any such estate or term, and every deed of gift, or deed of trust or mortgage, conveying real estate or goods and chattels," to be recorded. Mortgages and deeds of trust convey estates and interests in real estate and goods and chattels. Assignments thereof pass them from the creditors to third parties or strangers to the original transactions, either by deed or informal contract. For this proposition there is an abundance of authority in which similar statutes of other states have been construed. Torrey v. Deavitt, 53 Vt. 331; Williams v. Pelley, 96 Ill. App. 346; Bank v. Anderson, 14 Iowa 544, 83 Am. Dec. 390; Bowling v. Cook, 39 Iowa, 200; Bridge v. Shedd, 82 Iowa, 540, 48 N. W. 933; Swasey v. Emerson, 168 Mass. 118, 46 N. E. 426, 60 Am. St. Rep. 368; Huitink v. Thompson, 95 Minn. 392, 104 N. W. 237, 111 Am. St. Rep. 476, 5 Ann. Cas. 338; Bacon v. Van Schoonhoven, 87 N. Y. 446; Decker v. Boice, 83 N. Y. 215; Henniges v. Paschke, 9 N. D. 489, 84 N. W. 350, 81 Ann. St. Rep. 588; Donaldson v. Grant, 15 Utah, 231, 49 Pac. 779. In my opinion some of the decisions just cited go too far. They make a merely implied assignment of the lien recordable. That cannot possibly be brought within the terms of the statute. I should say, too, that, if the mortgage is expressly assigned and it secures notes or bonds mentioned in it, a subsequent purchaser is not protected, as against a subsequent assignee of the notes or bonds. He cannot rely upon the release of the mortgage by the assignee, without requiring production of the notes. But, if the mortgage, deed of trust, or vendor's lien mentions no notes or bonds and merely secures a debt evidenced by it and not otherwise, the assignee, shown to be the owner thereof by his recorded assignment, may effectually release it, although there be unmentioned notes representing the debt, and thus give a subsequent purchaser relying upon the release, and ignorant of a second assignment, a preference over the second assignee. The rule applicable between a first assignee and a purchaser in such case should apply to a purchaser and a second assignee.

For the distinction between an assignee of the lien and an assignee of notes described in it, as regards right respecting an innocent purchaser of the property, Turk v. Skiles and Bank v. Harman, cited, may properly be invoked as authority. The following observations made by Judge Staples in the latter case were approved by Judge Brannon in the former:

"If the deed from M. G. Harman to Asher W. Harman had mentioned the existence of a negotiable note, it might have become the duty of Mrs. O'Toole, before purchasing, to call for its production; the failure of the parties to produce it might justly have led to a strong suspicion that the note had passed out of the possession of Michael G. Harman into the hands of a third party. Mrs. O'Toole having constructive notice of the lien, would have the like notice of the negotiable note, and she would not be allowed to close her eyes to the fact thus communicated. But it will be observed that the deed makes no reference to any note, or to any personal obligation of the debtor whatever. The most prudent and cautious inquirer would not have supposed that any such instrument existed. Certainly it cannot be said that persons were bound at their peril to suspect or presume it."

These two cases do not judicially hold that the purchasers would not have been protected, if the notes had been mentioned in the deeds, nor do we, for the facts did not warrant or call for application of the rule indicated, nor do they here. But they hold that the purchaser is protected, when the note or bond is not so mentioned, if the apparent owner of the lien has released it.

[6] In the case of the mortgage involved here there was an assignment of the lien itself by a formal deed. That carried an estate or interest in the land, wherefore, as has been shown by ample authority, the deed of assignment was recordable, and, if not recorded, would have been void as against a subsequent purchaser for value and without notice, and the release by Augustine good against the bank, in the controversy between it and the trust company. But it was recorded and constituted constructive notice to the trust company that the bank was the owner of four-fifteenths of the mortgage, in consequence of which Augustine could validly release only the remaining eleven-fifteenths thereof. This conclusion makes obvious the correctness of the decree as to the mortgage.

Perceiving no error in the decree either as to the notes or the mortgage, we will affirm. Affirmed.

FISHER v. TETER et al. (No. 4191.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Dec. 6, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Wills 728, 736—Rights of devisees under prior oil and gas lease stated.

The rules and principles announced in Pittsburg & West Virginia Gas Co. v. Ankrom, 83 W. Va. 81, 97 S. E. 593, 5 A. L. R. 1157, and Musgrave v. Musgrave, 86 W. Va. 119, 103 S. E. 302, are reaffirmed and applied to the facts alleged in the bill in this case.

2. Wills 741—Complaint held not to show that defendants fraudulently prevented drilling on plaintiff's land.

The principles of those cases are controlling in this case, notwithstanding the general allegations of fraud and collusion between the operating lessees and the owners by devise or partition of lots adjoining the lands of plaintiff. Applying the rules of pleading announced in Hall v. South Penn Oil Co., 71 W. Va. 82, 76 S. E. 124.

Poffenbarger and Lynch, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lewis County.

Bill by Margaret L. Fisher against Philander K. Teter and others. Decree for defendants on demurrer, and complainant appeals. Affirmed.

Herbert M. Blair and Linn Brannon, both of Weston, for appellant.

Charles P. Swint and Robert L. Bland, both of Weston, A. B. Fleming, Charles Powell and Kemble White, all of Fairmont, and Edward A. Brannon, of Weston, for appellees.

MILLER, J. Plaintiff is the sister of the defendants Philander K. Teter and Jesse H. Teter, and all are devisees and heirs of David Teter, who died testate in 1912. By his will the testator devised his farm of 528.97 acres in Lewis County, as follows:

"To my daughter Margaret Lancaster Fisher the tract of fifty acres known as the Jesse Moneypenny tract adjoining lands of E. C. Fisher. I also will to Margaret Lancaster Fisher another fifty acres to be cut off my home farm beginning at a south east corner, near the present residence of John Horton, thence running along the old fence line a southerly course eight rods, thence to the top of the hill on Neds run so as to contain fifty acres. Making a total to her 100 acres in the two tracts. After deducting said fifty acres from the right hand side of road.

"I will and bequeath to my son Jesse Hamilton all of the lands on the right hand side of the Murphys creek as you go up the creek. And all of the lands on the left hand side as you go up Murphys Creek to my son Philander K. Teter upon a survey it is found that that part of the home farm willed to Jesse H. contains a greater number of acres than the part willed to Philander K. then Jesse H. is to pay to Philander K. twenty dollars per acre within six twelve and eighteen months in three equal payments."

The will was dated July 13, 1901. Prior to that date, namely, on August 18, 1899, the said David Teter and A. L. Teter, his wife, executed and delivered to Andrew Edmiston a lease on said larger tract for oil and gas, bounding it by the lands of adjoining owners, and further describing it as containing 512 acres, more or less, and containing the covenants and agreements usually contained in such leases, for the term of five years and so long thereafter as oil and gas might be produced in paying quantities, which lease came by assignment to the Philadelphia Company of West Virginia, the Hope Natural Gas Company, and the South Penn Oil Company, the present owners thereof.

The bill alleges that shortly after the death of said testator Philander K. and Jesse H. Teter procured a surveyor to make a survey and a plat of the entire tract so devised, and designated thereon the several lots allotted to each of the said devisees by said testator, which plat was placed on record by them, a copy of which is exhibited with the bill; that subsequently to the making of said survey and plat, and in accordance therewith, division fences were built and continuously since then have been maintained along the boundary lines between the several parcels so designated and held by the devisees under the terms of the will, and so definitely fixed by said survey and plat; and that the devisees aforesaid thereupon assumed and took exclusive possession and control of their respective parcels, and have since so occupied the same as their own.

The bill alleges further that said will was executed before any development of said land for oil and gas, and that to construe said will so as to permit two of the devisees thereunder to consume and enjoy the fruits of said leasing would be contrary to the manifest purpose of the testator, and repugnant to the intention on his part to dispose of said tract of land among his devisees and according to the nature of an indulgent and considerate father.

The prayer of the bill is for an accounting to plaintiff by said Philander K. and Jesse H. Teter, and that they pay over to her her proper share of all gas well rentals or royalties collected or secured by them, or either of them, by reason of or from any and all gas wells drilled or operated on any part of said land, and that her right to share in the future in the rents and royalties and in all the oil and gas produced from said lands, under said lease, be adjudicated and determined.

It is conceded that the decree below sustaining defendants' demurrer to and dismissing her bill must be affirmed, unless we should determine to overrule prior decisions, or should consider other allegations thereof, to be now referred to, take this case out of the rule of those decisions, and constitute sufficient ground for distinguishing it from the cases relied on by demurrants, and upon which the court below based its decree.

[1] In Pittsburg & West Virginia Gas Co. v. Ankrom, 83 W. Va. 81, 97 S. E. 593, 5 A. L. R. 1157, and Musgrave v. Musgrave, 86 W. Va. 119, 103 S. E. 302, we distinctly decided, that where land subject to a prior lease for oil and gas has been partitioned, or devised in severalty by a testator, as in the case at bar, the owner of each of the subdivisions from which oil or gas is produced is entitled to recover the rents and royalties arising from the subdivisions owned by him. Those cases received thorough consideration by the court, after elaborate arguments by counsel; and nothing that we could now say in support of the principles there established would add to or detract from the arguments advanced and maintained therein; and our opinion is to reaffirm the points adjudicated therein. Those cases are conclusive of this case unless, as already suggested, something has been alleged by plaintiff to take the case from under the principles of those cases.

[2] The allegations relied on we do not think show any fraud or collusion on the part of the defendants affecting the rights of plaintiff. They are as follows:

"Plaintiff further says that no drilling whatever has been done by any of the said operating companies on the parcel of said Teter tract allotted to her, although plaintiff's said parcel is covered by said lease and is held thereunder to the exclusion of plaintiff and all persons with whom she might contract for the drilling and exploration of her said parcel for oil and gas; and plaintiff here alleges that, although she, and those acting for her, have requested said Hope Natural Gas Company and said Pittsburg & West Virginia Company, and its predecessors, the Philadelphia Company of West Virginia, to test plaintiff's said parcel for oil and gas by drilling and completing wells thereon, they, and each of them, have declined and refused so to do on the ground that said Teter tract had been adequately and sufficiently drilled and developed by the existing wells on said parcels of said Philander K. Teter and Jesse H. Teter.

"Plaintiff further says that, although she is in no wise responsible therefor, the operations of the said Companies engaged in developing said land for oil and gas have been restricted and confined to a limited portion of same and have not been such as to adequately and properly test and explore for gas or oil the entire Teter tract bound by said lease without regard to the surface lines and boundaries defining and separating the parts severally held by said Philander K. Teter, Jesse H. Teter and plaintiff, but that in drilling said Teter tract of land said operating companies have persistently and unalterably pursued a policy of confining the drilling to the parts of said tract of land held by said Philander K. Teter and Jesse H. Teter.

"Plaintiff further says that said policy of limiting the drilling to the portions of said land so devised to said Philander K. Teter and Jesse H. Teter, as aforesaid, has been adopted and consistently adhered to by said operating Companies, as plaintiff is informed and believes, as a result of various arrangements and understandings from time to time entered into and had between said Philander K. Teter and Jesse H. Teter, co-operating with each other in the matter, or acting independently, and said operating Companies, or their officers and agents, whereby said Philander K. Teter and Jesse H. Teter have contrived to have said drilling confined and restricted, as aforesaid, and that pursuant to further arrangements and understandings entered into and had between the said Philander K. Teter and Jesse H. Teter and the said operating Companies, or their officers and agents, said Philander K. Teter and Jesse H. Teter have, until a comparatively recent date, contrived and managed to have paid to them, and have been taking, appropriating and enjoying all of the gas well rentals and royalties paid for the gas wells on said Teter tract to the exclusion of plaintiff and in total disregard of her rights therein."

What the rights of plaintiff may be against the operating companies, if the facts be as they are alleged in the first and second paragraphs of the bill quoted, we need not say, for the question is not presented. But it may be said without hesitancy that the failure or refusal of the lessees to perform any of the covenants, express or implied, in the lease can constitute no ground upon which plaintiff can lawfully demand an accounting by the other devisees for the rents and royalties received, or produced from the land allotted to them by the testator. Nor will the fact alleged in the third paragraph, if true, that the policy of the operating companies in confining their operations to the land devised to Phllander K. and Jesse H. Teter, respectively, which plaintiff on information and belief alleges to be the result of various arrangements and understandings from time to time entered into and had between them, co-operating with each other, or acting independently, and said operating companies, their officers and agents, whereby they contrived to have the drilling confined and restricted to their land, to the exclusion of plaintiff's land, entitle plaintiff to the relief she is seeking by her bill.

It is not alleged that plaintiff's land has sustained any drainage of oil or gas from the operations on the parcels devised to her brothers. The bill contains no allegation as to the location of the wells drilled on their land with reference to her land. It is not unlawful for one adjoining owner to persuade a lessee to first drill and develop his land subject to such common lease, provided no injury is done to the land of the other; and certainly he could not be compelled to account to the unsuccessful contestant for the right of priority in development for oil or gas produced on his land by such prior development, unless, as said, there resulted unlawful drainage and fraud therein injuriously affecting the land of such adjoining owner.

The case here presented is unlike that presented in Steel v. American Oil Development Co., 80 W. Va. 206, 92 S. E. 410, L. R. A. 1917E, 975; Grass v. Big Creek Development Co., 75 W. Va. 719, 84 S. E. 750, L. R. A. 1915E, 1057; and Jennings v. Southern Carbon Co., 73 W. Va. 215, 80 S. E. 368. The first two of these cases were actions at law against the lessee for damages for failure to develop resulting in damage. The last case was a suit in equity for failure to develop, and for a cancellation for breach of the implied covenant to properly develop the leased land, in which case we reversed the decree below sustaining the demurrer to the bill, and remanded the cause for further proceedings. In the case of Hall v. South Penn Oil Co., 71 W. Va. 82, 76 S. E. 124, the bill which sought cancellation of a lease and did contain charges of drainage and fraud, was held bad because too general and as alleging mere conclusions of law and not facts sufficient to sustain the bill. In Steel v. American Oil Development Co., supra, we held that a lessor in an oil and gas lease may maintain a suit in trespass on the case to recover damages for injury sustained by him because of the failure of the lessee to drill wells necessary to save the oil on his land and prevent it from being drained by wells on adjoining land. May not the relief suggested by these authorities be invoked where the lessee of an entire tract fails to develop the whole to the extent necessary to protect the rights of all owners, or parts thereof, subject to the provisions of the lease? This is a question mooted, but not decided.

POFFENBARGER, J. (dissenting). For reasons elaborately stated in Campbell v. Lynch, 81 W. Va. 374, 94 S. E. 739, L. R. A. 1918B, 1070, and in my dissenting opinion in Musgrave v. Musgrave, 86 W. Va. 119, 124, 103 S. E. 302, I am unable to concur in the decision of this cause, and I respectfully dissent. Regarding the facts involved in Pittsburg & West Virginia Gas Co. v. Ankrom, 83 W. Va. 81, 97 S. E. 593, 5 A. L. R. 1157, and Musgrave v. Musgrave as constituting exceptions to the general principles expressed by me, as aforesaid, and this case as falling within those principles, Judge LYNCH also dissents, and authorizes me to say for him that he regards the decision in Campbell v. Lynch as being correct and the views expressed by me in Musgrave v. Musgrave as being generally sound and applicable in ordinary cases of the kind here involved.

I cannot forego this opportunity to make some observations respecting the possibility of relief to the plaintiff and others similarly situated in some form other than that sought by the bills in this and the other cases above referred to. Her situation is admittedly one of hardship. All of the decisions enunciating the rule applied here by a majority of the court concede this. When it is pressed upon the attention of the courts adopting the rule, they either make a feeble and unsatisfactory response or suggest remedy in some other form without indication of its character.

Could this plaintiff, upon the facts alleged in her bill, showing the rankest kind of discrimination against her and deprivation of the use of her land, in so far as it is useful for oil and gas production, compel the lessee to drill wells on it? Certainly not. Ammons v. South Penn Oil Co., 47 W. Va. 610, 35 S. E. 1004; Harris v. Oil Co., 57 Ohio St. 118, 48 N. E. 502; Koch Ballet's Appeal, 93 Pa. 434; McKnight v. Kreutz, 51 Pa. 232; Paschall v. Passmore, 15 Pa. 295; Harness v. Eastern Oil Co., 49 W. Va. 232, 38 S. E. 662; Colgan

v. Oil Co., 194 Pa. 234, 45 Atl. 119, 75 Am. St. Rep. 695; Young v. Oil Co., 194 Pa. 243, 45 Atl. 121. Could she have the lease canceled as to her land? Emphatically, no. McGraw Oil Co. v. Kennedy, 65 W. Va. 595, 64 S. E. 1027, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 939; Core v. Petroleum Co., 52 W. Va. 276, 43 S. E. 128; Kellar v. Craig, 126 Fed. 630, 61 C. C. A. 366. See, also, the cases cited in support of the answer to the former question.

Can she recover damages for failure to drill her land or failure so fully to develop the whole lease as to test her part of the land? No. The difficulties she would have to overcome in an effort of that kind are disclosed in Grass v. Big Creek Dev. Co., 75 W. Va. 719, 84 S. E. 750, L. R. A. 1915E, 1057, in which it is held that—

If "the operator exercises a sound and honest judgment, and not an unreasonable or arbitrary one, in continuing operations for mineral oils, he has faithfully discharged the duties implied devolving upon him by virtue of the lease, although he may not exercise that high degree of diligence which the exaggerated expectations of the landowner may demand."

If she could, the remedy would be inadequate. No man, no jury, could more than approximate the damages, and it may well be doubted whether approximation is attainable in any action for damages for breach of a covenant to drill for oil or gas. Nothing but the drill can determine whether any piece of land has oil or gas in it, and the lessee with his experts can practically demonstrate that there is none in any given parcel of land not drilled.

In a case of this class, the lessee cannot be required to treat each of the separate parcels of land covered by his single lease as a separate lease, and to protect all of the lines by offset wells. Any judgment or decree founded upon such a theory would so define and apply the law as to impair the obligation of the lease contract, in violation of provisions of both the federal and state Constitutions. When made, his lease required him to protect only the exterior boundary lines, limited in number, ordinarily, to four or five. If he is required to protect a dozen or more interior lines made in dividing the land, in addition to the exterior ones, his obligation is multiplied several times, and the increased obligation is based upon no act or assent of his. His lease conferred right to take out all the oil and gas, burdened with an obligation to protect exterior lines only. That right would be partially denied him if he were required to protect interior lines also. The value of the right originally conferred by the lease is depreciated proportionately with the extent of the burden imposed upon him by the construction necessary to make each parcel virtually a separate lease. His right is the correlative of the lessor's obligation. When it is diminished by construction the obligation is correspondingly reduced, and the right of the lessor enlarged. A clearer case of impairment of the obligation of a contract could hardly be imagined.

The rule adopted by the majority opinion makes the owners of the several parcels into which the leased tract has been divided separate lessors of their respective parcels. They are as separate, distinct, and strange to one another as if the parcel of each was the sole and only subject-matter of a separate lease executed by him. Each owns exclusively the oil and gas in his own parcel, and has no interest direct, indirect, or collateral in the oil or gas of any other tract. Consistency with this theory requires of its adherents the further holding that the lessee, thus holding separate leases, shall protect the interior division lines as well as the exterior lines, in cases of production in such close proximity thereto as will cause drainage. If not, he may take out all of the oil and gas from several small tracts into which the whole has been divided, by means of one or more wells located on one of them, and so give the owner of that one all of the minerals in all of the parcels, except the royalty. In the case of a lease of an oil-bearing tract divided by partition, subject to the lease, among four owners, the lessee must either drill four wells, where one would do, or give the owner of one parcel the minerals in all of them. It requires him to go beyond the obligation originally imposed upon him by the lease or to rob three owners for the benefit of one, or, if there is corruption between him and that one, for the benefit of himself and the favored lessee.

To say the lessee of the entire tract may be required to develop and work it as a whole, with diligence, by virtue of an implied covenant, or incur liability in damages for failure to do so, does not cover the entire situation, and that is the utmost right against him that seems to have any real basis in judicial suggestion. He can diligently prosecute his enterprise within the meaning of this suggestion, without protection of interior division lines, and to the ruin of some of the separate owners within the exterior lines. He can comply with the implied covenant without such protection; but, to deal fairly and justly with all of the lot owners, and to maintain the relation of separate lessee to each of them, he must go beyond that covenant, to the extent of protecting the interior lines. Requirement of that on his part would work a radical and fundamental change in his contract, amounting to an impairment of its obligation.

FARMERS' WAREHOUSE CO. v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF MILLEDGEVILLE.
(No. 2445.)

Rehearing Denied Dec. 16, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Contracts — 37 — Secretary and manager held competent to witness instrument executed by corporation.

The secretary and manager of a corporation, who owns no stock in the corporation and is not otherwise beneficially or pecuniarily interested therein, is qualified to witness an instrument of writing to which the corporation is a party. Citizens' Trust Co. v. Butler, and cases cited, 152 Ga. —, 108 S. E. 468.

2. Chattel mortgages — 60 — Crops — 1 — Replevin — 4 — Not maintainable against cropper for crops attached to the soil; bill of sale to growing crop must be attested by two witnesses including official witness.

"Agricultural crops raised by a 'cropper' do not become personalty until they are detached from the soil; and the owner of the land cannot employ the remedy provided in the Civ. Code 1910, § 4483, generally applicable for the recovery of the possession of personalty, for the purpose of recovering from the 'cropper' possession of the crops raised by him, while they remain attached to the soil." Williams v. Mitchem, 151 Ga. 227, 106 S. E. 284; Civ. Code 1910, § 3617; Pitts v. Hendrix, 6 Ga. 452; Frost v. Render, 65 Ga. 15; Bagley v. Columbus So. Ry. Co., 98 Ga. 626, 25 S. E. 638, 34 L. R. A. 286, 58 Am. St. Rep. 335. See, also, 8 R. C. L. 360, 371, §§ 6, 16; Cobb's Law of the Farm, 13. (a) A bill of sale to the immature and growing crop, in order to be entitled to record, must have been attested by two witnesses, one of whom is an official witness. Civ. Code 1910, § 3257.

3. Warehousemen — 17 — One receiving warehouse receipts for cotton to apply on notes held bona fide purchaser as against vendee in bill of sale.

Applying the principle ruled in headnote 1, and under the allegations of the petition, which are admitted by the demurrer to be true, the plaintiff in the lower court was a bona fide purchaser for value of the cotton and obtained title thereto as against the vendee in the bill of sale.

4. Pleading — 220 — Judgment on demurrer held final determination when it was agreed that court should determine rights of parties.

Where parties to a controversy pending in court enter into the following agreement relatively to the issues involved, to wit, "that the court in his decision on the demurrer provide in his judgment to whom the cotton [in controversy] belongs and the rights of the parties relatively thereto be determined," this is a submission to the court upon the facts alleged in the equitable petition and the issue made by the demurrer of the question of title to the property, and his determination of that question, a judgment being rendered accordingly, is a final determination of the cause upon its merits.

5. Demurrer properly overruled.

The trial judge did not err in overruling the general demurrer to the petition, and, under the agreed statement of facts, in decreeing the title to the cotton in question to be in the plaintiff.

George, J., dissenting.

Error from Superior Court, Baldwin County; J. B. Park, Judge.

Suit by the First National Bank of Milledgeville against the Farmers' Warehouse Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

The First National Bank of Milledgeville, Ga., hereinafter referred to as the bank, brought an equitable petition against the Farmers' Warehouse Company, hereinafter referred to as the warehouse company, and Samuel Evans Sons & Co., hereinafter called Evans & Co., for injunction and other relief. The petition alleged in substance the following: On March 2, 1920, the bank advanced to W. P. Ennis $1,042.79, and took as security therefor the promissory note of Ennis payable to the bank, due October 1, 1920. C. W. Ennis, the father of W. P. Ennis, indorsed and guaranteed payment of the note. At the time the bank advanced the money to Ennis it knew that he was a farmer engaged in growing cotton and other crops in Baldwin county, and the money was advanced to him on the faith of the crops as well as on the indorsement of C. W. Ennis; but the bank did not know at the date of the note what lands W. P. Ennis was cultivating. On September 20, 1920, W. P. Ennis delivered to Evans & Co., for the bank, two bales of cotton; and on October 4, 1920, Ennis delivered to Evans & Co., for the bank, six bales of cotton. Receipts were issued to W. P. Ennis on the respective dates for the eight bales of cotton, and were not negotiable. Immediately after the delivery of the receipts to Ennis by Evans & Co., Ennis delivered them to the plaintiff, with instructions to credit the cotton on the indebtedness; and the receipts are now, and have been since that date, in the possession and custody of the plaintiff. Plaintiff accepted the cotton as a credit on its note, but agreed with Ennis as a matter of accommodation to him, with the hope that the price of cotton would advance, to hold the cotton and convert it into cash, which agreement has been fully complied with. Plaintiff "alleges positively and unequivocally that it accepted said cotton as a payment and credit on said note, and to the extent of the value of said cotton relieved the said W. P. Ennis of all other and further liability on account thereof." Plaintiff is a bona fide purchaser of the cotton, without any notice or knowledge of the facts hereinafter set out.

On May 29, 1920, W. P. Ennis, without any knowledge on the part of the plaintiff or his indorser, C. W. Ennis, executed and delivered to the warehouse company an instrument purporting to be a bill of sale upon his entire crop, including cotton raised or to be raised during the year 1920, cultivated by him or by his direction on lands of Mrs. W. P. Ennis; the instrument purporting to convey the title to all of the crops into the warehouse company. The instrument was executed in the presence of, and attested by, R. L. Wall, a notary public of Baldwin county, and was recorded in the office of the clerk of the superior court on June 1, 1920. On June 22, 1920, W. P. Ennis, without the knowledge of plaintiff or C. W. Ennis, executed and delivered another instrument purporting to be a bill of sale, and purporting to convey the title to the same crops covered by the first instrument to the warehouse company. The last instrument was also executed in the presence of, and attested by, the same notary public, and was recorded June 23, 1920. The express consideration of the first instrument was $391, and that of the second instrument was $200. After the cotton was delivered by W. P. Ennis to Evans & Co., on or about October 12, 1920, the warehouse company sued out bail trover for the eight bales of cotton against Evans & Co., returnable to the January term, 1921, of the superior court of Baldwin county, and at the same time made an affidavit for bail for the cotton. Copy of the suit was served on Evans & Co., and the warehouse company is demanding that Evans & Co. give the trover bond required by law. Evans & Co. have no interest in the cotton except in so far as insurance and storage charges are concerned, and lay no claim whatsoever to the cotton. The title to the cotton is in the bank, and under the law it has no right to intervene in the trover suit or to give bond for the production of the property or for the eventual condemnation money. Inasmuch as Evans & Co. have no interest in the cotton and no reason to contest the claim of the warehouse company, plaintiff will be remediless unless a court of equity intervenes. As against the bank the bills of sale executed to the warehouse company do not constitute any notice, and the records of the same are not notice to the bank, for the reasons: First, that the instruments were executed in the presence of, and attested by, Wall, who at the time of their execution was the secretary and treasurer and general manager of the warehouse company, in full control of its business; and, second, that if the bills of sale were valid at all as against the bank, a bona fide purchaser without notice, still their record is not constructive notice to the bank, for the reason that they purport to convey realty, and therefore, to entitle the instruments to record, it was necessary for them to be executed in the presence of two witnesses, one of whom should be a notary public or a justice of the peace. Even if entitled to record so as to be constructive notice to future purchasers, the instruments of the character heretofore set out cannot operate as notice, for the reason that it would be impossible for any future purchaser to ascertain from an examination of the record that mature, ginned, and baled cotton was covered by the description in the instruments. Plaintiff had no notice, either actual or constructive, of the existence and execution of the instruments, and it in good faith bought from W. P. Ennis the cotton and credited him with the same upon his note, and to that extent relieved him of further liability thereon, the exact amount to be determined when the cotton is placed upon the market; and the plaintiff relieved, to the extent of the value of the cotton, the indorser on the note, C. W. Ennis. The plaintiff prayed: First, that the warehouse company be enjoined from proceeding further with the trover action until the further order of the court; second, that Evans & Co. be enjoined from giving any bond and from changing the present status of the cotton; third, that the court decree the title to the cotton to be in plaintiff.

The defendant filed a general demurrer to the petition, on the ground that it set forth no cause of action and showed no ground for equitable relief. It was agreed between counsel for all parties that the bail-trover suit, referred to in the petition, be merged into the present suit; that W. P. Ennis, the warehouse company, Evans & Co., and the bank are parties hereto; and that the court in his decision on the demurrer provide in his judgment to whom the cotton in controversy belongs, and the rights of the parties relatively thereto be determined, with the right of all parties to except. It was further agreed that R. L. Wall is not a stockholder in the warehouse company, but is its secretary and treasurer and general manager, and was only that at the time of the execution of the bills of sale by W. P. Ennis; and that this agreement be considered and made a part of the petition in this case. The court, after reciting the above agreement, overruled the demurrer and passed the following order:

"Ordered further that the title to the eight bales of cotton in question be and the same is hereby declared to be in the First National Bank of Milledgeville, Ga."

To the judgment the Farmers' Warehouse Company excepted.

HARPER v. HESTERLEE. (No. 2375.)(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 17, 1921.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 18, 1921.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Deeds \S 111—Not extended beyond terms because of grantee's belief or grantor's unexpressed intention.

The expressed description in a deed to realty will not be extended beyond its terms because of a belief by the holder under it that it covered land not embraced in that description, nor because of any unexpressed intention in the mind of the grantor that it should cover land not described in the deed itself, there being no suggestion of mistake in the drawing of it. Williamson v. Tison, 99 Ga. 791, 26 S. E. 766.

2. Evidence \S 23(2) — Court takes judicial notice of form and contents of particular lot of land.

The court will take judicial notice of the fact that land lot No. 81 in the second district and third section of Carroll county, Ga., contains 202½ acres and is in the form of a square. Huxford v. Southern Pine Co., 124 Ga. 181, 52 S. E. 439; Payton v. McPhaul, 128 Ga. 510, 58 S. E. 50, 11 Ann. Cas. 163.

3. Deeds \S 114(5)—Description as 25 acres in southwest corner of lot construed.

Where land is alleged to be described as "25 acres of land lying and being in the southwest corner of lot of land No. 81 in the second district and third section of Carroll county, Georgia," such language should be construed as alleging that the lot is in the form of a square, located by taking the southwest corner of the lot as a base point and running equidistant along the two sides of the lot which intersect at such corner to the intersection of other lines drawn parallel to the respective lines first mentioned, all the lines being of such length as will embrace the exact quantity of 25 acres. Payton v. McPhaul, 128 Ga. 510, 58 S. E. 50, 11 Ann. Cas. 163.

4. Verdict erroneously directed.

Accordingly, in an action for land, where the plaintiff on the trial of the case relied on a conveyance to himself of "25 acres of land lying and being in the southwest corner of lot of land No. 81 in the second district and third section of Carroll county, Georgia," in view of the language of such instrument and the conflicting evidence as to the establishment of a line by agreement between the parties, the court erred in directing the following verdict: "We, the jury, find in favor of the plaintiff as to the north line and establish it as set out in the petition. We further find in favor of the injunction, permanently restraining the defendant as prayed for, in reference to the house; and we leave the east line open and undecided."

1. Injunction \S 32—Defendant having claim against plaintiff in excess of municipal court's jurisdiction may sue to restrain action in such court.

A contractor brought suit against the owner of a building for $250, the balance alleged to be due under the contract, in the municipal court of Atlanta. The owner filed in the superior court of Fulton county an equitable petition against the contractor and the surety upon its bond, in which the owner claimed damages in the sum of $5,000 for breach of the building contract, alleging that the municipal court of Atlanta was a court of limited jurisdiction, and that its jurisdiction did not exceed $500 in amount. The owner prayed that the suit in the municipal court of Atlanta be enjoined, and that the plaintiff in that suit be required to set up its claim in the equity suit. Held:

The owner was entitled to maintain the suit in equity. Kirkpatrick v. Holland, 148 Ga. 708, 98 S. E. 265.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 16, 1921.)

1. Wills \Leftrightarrow 53(9)—Evidence that property formerly owned by husband, a caveator, admissible on question of capacity.

Where probate of a will is contested for incapacity of the maker, it is proper to inquire whether the provisions of the will are just and reasonable, and accord with the state of the testator's family relations, or the contrary. Civil Code 1910, § 3841; Franklin v. Belt, 130 Ga. 37, 60 S. E. 146. In the trial of such issue the source from which the property disposed of by the will came into the decedent's possession may be shown, as well as the reasonableness of the provisions of the will. Holland v. Bell, 148 Ga. 277, 96 S. E. 419. Accordingly, it was not error to admit in evidence deeds showing that the land in controversy, and devised under the will, formerly belonged to the husband of the testatrix, now one of the caveators, and was conveyed by him to a third party, and subsequently conveyed by such third party to the testatrix.

2. Wills \Leftrightarrow 53(9)—In contest over will embracing property formerly owned by caveator, evidence as to conveyances and occupancy held admissible.

It was not error to allow parol evidence by the husband of the testatrix, to the effect that he executed the deed first mentioned in the preceding headnote to the grantee named therein, because he had borrowed the sum of $300; that he had repaid the borrowed money and had requested said grantee to reconvey the land to himself, which request was refused; that he had lived upon the property, claiming it as his own, for more than 50 years, and had given it in and paid taxes on it during that time; and that he had not given to the grantee in said deed authority to make the deed to the testatrix.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 2, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. States \Leftrightarrow 117, 118, 166—Statute authorizing setting apart railroad rentals as special fund, etc., not invalid under constitutional provisions as to contracting debts, borrowing money, and applying proceeds of sale of state property to bonded debt.

On August 5, 1921 (Laws 1921, p. 230), an act of the General Assembly of Georgia was approved, entitled, "An act to authorize the Governor, from time to time, to set apart the rental of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, for limited periods, as a special fund, and to authorize the Governor to draw warrants against said special fund, to discount the same, and to place the proceeds in the treasury for the purpose of meeting the obligations of the state then created and incurred by law, and for other purposes." Held:

The act does not contravene any of the following declarations of the Constitution of the state, viz.: (1) That no debt shall be contracted by or on behalf of the state, except as the constitution specifies, Civ. Code 1910, § 6558. (2) That all laws authorizing the borrowing of money by or on behalf of the state shall specify the purpose for which it is to be used, and it shall not be used for any other purpose. Id. § 6559. (3) That the proceeds of the sale of any property owned by the state, whenever the General Assembly may authorize its sale, shall be applied to the payment of the bonded debt of the state, and shall not be used for any other purpose whatever, so long as the state has any existing bonded debt. Id. § 6570.

2. States \Leftrightarrow 115—Statute providing for setting apart railroad rentals as special fund, etc., not violative of fiscal policy requiring expenses for each year to be paid from the revenue for that year.

Held further, that the act is not invalid because, as claimed, it is violative of a fiscal policy of the Constitution that the expenses of the state for each year shall be paid from the revenue received by it during that year.

3. States \Leftrightarrow 138—Governor held authorized to draw warrants payable after expiration of term.

The executive warrant referred to in the petition, and presented to the comptroller general to be countersigned by him, is not void on the alleged ground that the Governor has no lawful authority to draw a warrant against funds of the state when they will not be paid into the treasury, and the warrant will not become payable during his term of office.

4. Statutes \Leftrightarrow 68—Statute held general law and not invalid because of conflict with another law.

The act is a general law within the meaning of article 1, § 4, par. 1, Const. (Civ. Code 1910, § 6391), which declares in part: "Laws of a general nature shall have uniform operation throughout the state, and no special law shall be enacted in any case for which provision has been made by an existing general law." Mathis v. Jones, 84 Ga. 804, 11 S. E. 1018; Morrison v. Cook, 146 Ga. 570, 91 S. E. 671. Being a general law, the act is therefore not invalid because of the existence, at the time of its passage, of the act of 1919 (Laws 1919, p. 331, § 109), providing: "That fifty per cent. of all revenues received by the state from all sources of income or taxation shall be used and expended for the support and maintenance of the common schools of Georgia for the year in which said income or taxes are due and payable. This section to go into effect January 1, 1922."

5. States ~~127~~—Statute providing for setting apart railroad revenue as special fund, etc., not repealed.

Nor was the act of August 5, 1921 (Laws 1921, p. 230), repealed by the general appropriation act approved August 15, 1921 (Laws 1921, p. 7), making the following appropriation, in section 6(c): "For the support and maintenance of the common or public schools of the state, four million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($4,250,000) for each of the years 1922 and 1923, and should the revenue of the state exceed the sum of eight million five hundred thousand dollars ($8,500,000), then one-half of the excess of each year to be applied to said common or public schools. (Provided, that this appropriation shall be composed of special funds and taxes as provided by the Constitution of this state, and shall be kept and expended under the provisions governing same.)"

6. No error to grant mandamus.

It was not error to grant a mandamus absolute, requiring the comptroller general to countersign the executive warrant presented to him.

Hill, J., and Beck, P. J., dissenting.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Mandamus on petition of the Governor, T. W. Hardwick, against W. A. Wright, Comptroller General. Judgment in favor of the petitioner, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

The General Assembly passed an act, approved by the Governor August 5, 1921 (Laws 1921, p. 230), which reads as follows:

"An act to authorize the Governor, from time to time, to set apart the rental of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, for limited periods, as a special fund, and to authorize the Governor to draw warrants against said special fund, to discount the same, and to place the proceeds in the treasury for the purpose of meeting the obligations of the state then created and incurred by law, and for other purposes.

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Georgia, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, that the Governor of the state is hereby authorized and fully empowered to assign and set aside not exceeding five years of the rental arising from the existing lease of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, as a special fund to be used exclusively for the purpose of paying warrants drawn against the same as hereinafter provided, provided that $100,000 set aside as public school fund be paid out of the general fund.

"Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, that in order to enable the state to meet its obligations then already created and incurred by law, and where revenue from other sources is, in the opinion of the Governor, not sufficient, the Governor of the state is hereby duly authorized and fully empowered, from time to time, to draw his warrant or warrants against the special fund created by section 1 of this act, so held as a special fund in the treasury, for such sum or sums as may be required to meet appropriations duly made by law, and the Governor is further authorized and empowered to discount said warrants so drawn against said special fund, and to place the proceeds arising therefrom in the treasury for the purpose of meeting and discharging the obligations of the state then created and incurred, as aforesaid, for which appropriations have been made by law. Said warrants shall be duly countersigned by the comptroller general. The holders of said warrants shall further have all the rights and privileges which the original obligees of said then incurred obligations might have had against the state.

"Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, that all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be, and the same are, hereby repealed."

On September 9, 1921, the Governor, acting under the authority of this act, issued an order assigning and setting aside, as a special fund to be used exclusively for the purposes mentioned in the act, all the rentals arising from the existing lease of the Western & Atlantic Railroad accruing between the date of the order and August 4, 1926, and further ordering that such fund—

"shall, as it shall from time to time be paid into the treasury of this state by the lessees of the Western & Atlantic Railroad in pursuance of the existing lease thereof, be held as a specific fund in the treasury of the state of Georgia for the purpose of paying warrants drawn against the same by the Governor, duly countersigned by the comptroller general, as provided in said act."

On the same date the executive order was issued the Governor, in pursuance of it and of the provisions of the act of the General Assembly, drew his warrant upon the state treasurer, reciting that as Governor he had sold and assigned to the Bank of Tifton of the rentals arising from the lease of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, and to be due and payable to the state of Georgia, under said lease, for the month of August, 1923, the sum of $10,000, and that the Bank of Tifton had paid to the state of Georgia the full purchase price thereof, and therefore ordered and directed the treasurer of the state to pay to the Bank of Tifton, or order, the sum of $10,000 out of the special fund set aside in the treasury of the state by the executive order, in pursuance of the act, the same to be payable out of the rentals to be derived from said lease of the Western & Atlantic Railroad for the month of August, 1923, this warrant to be due and payable on August 1, 1923.

When the warrant, as the law requires, was presented to the comptroller general to be countersigned by him, he declined to countersign it, on the ground that he was advised that the warrant was illegal and void because issued under the authority of an act of the General Assembly which is unconstitutional.

The Governor thereupon filed in the superior court of Fulton county a petition for mandamus against the comptroller general, upon which a rule was issued requiring the comptroller general to countersign such warrant, unless he showed good cause to the contrary. The petition set forth the facts as above stated, and further that—

"Under the existing lease of the Western & Atlantic Railroad the rentals are $540,000 per annum, payable monthly in advance into the treasury of the state by the lessees on the 1st day of each month; and no other assignment of the rental for the month of August, 1923, had been made, except the one stated above as being made to the Bank of Tifton."

To this petition the comptroller general filed a response admitting all the allegations of fact which the petition contained, but setting up various grounds why the warrant is illegal and void and should not be countersigned.

On the hearing of the rule the judge of the superior court overruled the grounds set up in the response of the comptroller general, and entered a judgment making the rule absolute. To this judgment the comptroller general excepted.

Anderson, Rountree & Crenshaw and Clifford L. Anderson, all of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

Geo. M. Napier, Atty. Gen., A. G. Powell and Little, Powell, Smith & Goldstein, all of Atlanta, and Seward M. Smith, Asst. Atty. Gen., for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] 1. One ground set up in response to the mandamus nisi, and urged as cause why it should not be made absolute, is that the act of the General Assembly under which the petitioner, the Governor of the state of Georgia, claims the right to draw said warrant, is unconstitutional and therefore void, in that such warrant when drawn and countersigned becomes a debt contracted by and on behalf of the state, contrary to the provisions of article 7, § 3, par. 1 (Code § 6558), of the Constitution of the state of Georgia, reading as follows:

"No debt shall be contracted by or on behalf of the state, except to supply casual deficiencies of revenue, to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, and defend the state in time of war, or to pay the existing public debt; but the debt created to supply deficiencies in revenue shall not exceed, in the aggregate, two hundred thousand dollars."

The brief filed here for the plaintiff in error says on this point:

"The question is not whether the warrants by themselves are binding contracts, but whether the act which authorizes their issuance undertakes by its own terms to authorize the making of a debt. The contractual relation which creates the debt grows, not out of the warrants alone, but out of the legislative enactment setting aside a certain specified fund to pay the warrants and undertaking to subrogate the holders of the warrants to the rights of other persons in the event that particular fund should fail. It is the act which undertakes to create the debt, not the warrant."

And counsel argue that—

"Upon failure of the rentals to materialize, the state will be under the same obligation to the holders of these warrants as it was to the persons whose obligations were paid with the money derived from their discount."

An executive warrant drawn in accordance with the plan of the legislative act here under review is quite different in character from the ordinary warrant drawn by the Governor on the Treasurer. This act authorizes the Governor to assign and set aside not exceeding five years of the rental arising from the existing lease of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, as a special fund to be used exclusively for the purpose of paying warrants drawn by the Governor against it in discharging obligations of the state already created and incurred by law. The Governor is authorized to discount these warrants, and he is directed to place the proceeds arising therefrom in the treasury of the state for the purpose of meeting and discharging the obligations of the state already created and incurred, and for which appropriations have been made by law, the warrants to be duly countersigned by the comptroller general. It is plain that thus far the act does not undertake to provide for the contracting of a debt by or on behalf of the state; for the scheme manifestly is to provide an undertaking for the payment of debts of the state by discounting, without recourse as it were, its warrants payable exclusively out of a special and specified fund. The act, however, further provides that—

"The holders of said warrants shall further have all the rights and privileges which the original obligees of said then incurred obligations might have had against the state." Section 2.

From this last provision, when considered in connection with the plan of the act, does there arise a contractual relation between the state and a purchaser who discounts a warrant that creates or results in a debt against the state?

(1) After due consideration of this important question we have arrived at the conclusion that no debt by or in behalf of the state is so created. The warrants in pursuance of the act are drawn against a certain specified fund which it is anticipated will be in the treasury to meet them at the time fixed therein for their payment, and they are to be paid exclusively out of that fund; and should it fail to materialize—that is, not be in the treasury to meet the warrants at their maturity—then the holders of the purchased and discounted warrants would have no recourse against the state on the warrants themselves; but if the money obtained by having the warrants discounted and placed in the treasury by the Governor should be used by the state in the payment of its lawful obligations as referred to in the act, then “the holders of said warrants shall further have all the rights and privileges which the original obligees of said then incurred obligations might have had against the state.” In other words, if any of the money obtained by discounting the warrants shall be used to pay off any part of the obligations of the state as designated in the act, then the holders of the corresponding warrants shall have all the rights and privileges which the original obligees might have had against the state, if they had not been so satisfied. In such circumstances the original obligees would, of course, have no further rights and privileges against the state, but the act in effect provides that whatever rights and privileges they may have had, had not their obligations against the state been so met, are not absolutely extinguished in all respects, but shall continue to exist or remain in abeyance for the benefit of the holders of such corresponding warrants should the specific fund for their payment fail to materialize. No debt is thus created by or on behalf of the state, but as part of the consideration for the sale and discount of the warrants the holders thereof in a given contingency are allowed certain rights which other obligees formerly had against the state which had never been entirely extinguished, but had been preserved for such holders upon a contingency.

(2) Nor is the act under consideration void, as claimed in the response, because, as is therein alleged, it contravenes article 7, § 4, par. 1 (Civil Code, § 8559), of the Constitution of the state, which is as follows:

“All laws authorizing the borrowing of money by or on behalf of the state shall specify the purposes for which the money is to be used, and the money so obtained shall be used for the purposes specified, and for no other.”

The transaction designed by the act is not an undertaking to borrow money on behalf of the state and to pledge the rentals in question for the payment of warrants to be drawn against them. Much of what is said in the preceding division of the opinion is applicable here.

(3) Another ground urged why an absolute mandate should not be granted is:

“Because the act aforesaid is illegal and void, in that it is contrary to and contravenes article 7, § 13, par. 1 (Civil Code, § 8570), of the Constitution of the state of Georgia which reads as follows: ‘The proceeds of the sale of the Western & Atlantic, Macon & Brunswick, or other railroads held by the state, and any other property owned by the state, whenever the General Assembly may authorize the sale of the whole or any part thereof, shall be applied to the payment of the bonded debt of the state, and shall not be used for any other purpose whatever, so long as the state has any existing bonded debt: Provided, that the proceeds of the sale of the Western & Atlantic Railroad shall be applied to the payment of the bonds for which said railroad has been mortgaged, in preference to all other bonds.’”

The monthly rentals under the existing lease of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, which its lessee has promised to pay the state, are choses in action, and the right of the state to receive them is, of course, a property right owned by the state. The act under review in effect authorizes the sale of not exceeding five years of such rentals, for the purpose designated in the act. The question is therefore presented whether the phrase “any other property owned by the state,” here used in the connection as it appears in the Constitution, includes the property right of the state in the rentals which the lessee of the railroad has contracted to pay the state. In solving this question it is legitimate to look to the conditions—financial, economical and otherwise—existing at the time the makers of the Constitution were in convention. At that time the Western & Atlantic Railroad was under lease for a term of 20 years from December 27, 1870, at a yearly rental of $300,000, payable $25,000 at the end of each month. At the time the members of that convention were considering and debating the proposed provision of the Constitution declaring that “The proceeds of the sale of the Western & Atlantic Railroad” and “other property owned by the state whenever the General Assembly may authorize the sale of the whole or any part thereof, shall be applied to the payment of the bonded debt of the state,” the term of the lease of that railroad had more than 13 years to run before its expiration, and the rentals to be paid during that time amounted to something like $4,000,000. A resolution adopted by the convention July 18, 1877, authorizing the appointment of a committee to inquire into the propriety of selling the Western & Atlantic, Macon & Birmingham, and North & South Railroads, in order to pay the (state's) indebtedness, and to reduce taxation, recited that—

"The public debt of the state is now over eleven millions, with only about one third of the property owned before the war; and * * * the rate of taxation is about eight times as great as before the war; and * * * this heavy tax is not more than enough to pay the current expenses of the state, and the annual accruing interest of the public debt; and * * * it is deemed impolitic and impracticable to increase the present burdensome rate of taxation," etc. Jour. Const. Conv. 1877, p. 68; Small's Debates, 47.

There were other resolutions clearly indicating that the makers of the Constitution were keenly alive to the critical financial condition of the state and the extreme necessity existing for providing and adopting the earliest possible relief; yet we have been unable to find in any of the resolutions or debates of the convention the words "rentals," or "rentals of the Western & Atlantic Railroad," or "rentals" of any other property owned by the state. In view of the earnest efforts of the members of the constitutional convention to adopt measures to relieve the state of its then great financial embarrassment, and their diligent and exhaustive search for revenues of the state with which to accomplish that much-desired end, does it admit of a reasonable doubt that, if the members intended that the rentals of the Western & Atlantic Railroad—which then, as we have shown, amounted to a very large annual sum—should be applied exclusively towards the payment of the bonded debt of the state, they would not have said so in express and unequivocal terms? All that appears in the resolutions, reports, or debates of the constitutional convention on the subject of the public debt of the state, and as to how it should be paid, is set forth in the dissenting opinion written by Mr. Justice Cobb in Park v. Candler, 114 Ga. 466, 490, 40 S. E. 523, 530.

Moreover, "a long-continued and unquestioned interpretation of a paragraph of the Constitution by the General Assembly, or the executive, or the officers whose duty it is to obey and carry into effect the provisions of the paragraph, is a weighty argument in favor of such interpretation." Epping v. Columbus, 117 Ga. 263 (7), 43 S. E. 803. For more than half a century the Western & Atlantic Railroad has been operated under leases from the state, and no act of the General Assembly, so far as we are aware, has ever referred to or dealt with the rentals of the road as a part of the "property fund" devoted exclusively towards the payment of the bonded debt of the state; and it is a part of the financial history of the state that not a dollar of such rentals has ever been applied to such indebtedness.

Again, in Park v. Candler, 113 Ga. 647, 39 S. E. 89, a petition for mandamus was brought by the Governor against the Treasurer to compel him to pay certain executive warrants drawn (in accordance with the act of the General Assembly of December 8, 1897 [Laws 1897, p. 108]) upon the school fund for the payment of salaries of teachers of the common schools of the state. The treasurer had declined to pay more than $77,294.83 on the ground that there was in the treasury no other fund available for the payment of the warrants. The petition alleged, and the answer admitted, that $77,294.83 was the "amount of general funds arising from taxes, rental of the state's property, and other sources" in the treasury. It appears that the Governor, the Treasurer, the Attorney General who represented the Governor, and the learned counsel for the Treasurer all treated the "rental of the state's property" as part of the general fund, and not part of the "public property" fund to be applied solely to the payment of the bonded debt of the state. Nor is there anything in either the majority or the dissenting opinion of this court in that case intimating that the rentals of the state's property do not constitute a part of the general fund in the treasury. It is true there was no ruling made directly on this point; but it was held that—

"As the Treasurer admitted in his answer that there was in the treasury the sum of $77,294.83, which he had offered to appropriate to the payment of such of the warrants as the Governor should indicate, the court erred in making the mandamus absolute as to this amount."

Considering the ground upon which this ruling was based, the strong implication is that this court was in accord with the opinion of every one else connected with the case that the rental of the state's property did not constitute a part of the "public property fund." The record does not disclose from what property of the state the rental, constituting a part of the general fund, was received. The warrants, however, were presented for payment at the treasury on April 18, 1901, and the only rental of any part of the property of the state included in the Treasurer's next preceding report published in Georgia Laws 1900, p. 514, was amount received "from rental Western & Atlantic Railroad, $420,012.00." It would therefore seem certain that a part of the public fund dealt with in that case was a portion of the rentals of the Western & Atlantic Railroad.

For the reasons stated, namely, the entire failure of the framers of the present Constitution (1877) to refer in any way, either in resolutions or debates or otherwise, to the property right of the state to receive a large sum of money which the lessees of the Western & Atlantic Railroad had agreed to pay the state monthly for the use of the railroad property during the then existing lease, although the financial condition of the state was desperate; the continued and unchallenged construction given to the constitutional provision for more than 50 years by the legislative and executive departments of the state; and the physical precedent at least in Park v. Candler, 113 Ga. 647, 39 S. E. 89, of recognizing that the rentals of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, when received by the State Treasurer, properly constituted a part of the general fund in the treasury, and not a part of the "public property fund" to be applied exclusively to the payment of the state's bonded debt—for these reasons we say, and further because of the very nature of the subject being dealt with in the constitutional provision we are now considering, the end in view, the means sought for its accomplishment, and the language employed, it is abundantly clear to us that the framers of the Constitution never intended that the intangible property right of the state to receive money under contract for the use of its railroad property should be included in the expression "any other property owned by the state," so that, when the time to receive such money should, by legislative authority, be accelerated by discount, the proceeds thereof should become a part of the "public property fund" to be applied exclusively to the payment of the state's bonded debt.

It is, however, said, in effect, that the matters to which we have referred in this division of the opinion do not authorize our conclusion, because the General Assembly has never, prior to the act of August 5, 1921, which we are considering, authorized the sale of any of the rentals of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, and that it is only where property belonging to the state is authorized by the Legislature to be sold that the Constitution expressly declares that the proceeds of the sale shall be applied exclusively to the payment of the bonded debt of the state. The question is whether the right of the state to receive the money—the rental, under contract, for the use of the Western & Atlantic Railroad—is included in the phrase of the Constitution "any other property owned by the state." No contention is made that when the state receives the rental at its maturity it becomes a part of the "public property fund," to be applied exclusively to the payment of the state's bonded debt; but it is urged that, when the General Assembly authorizes a sale of any portion of the rentals of the railroad, then the proceeds of the sale must be applied exclusively to the payment of the bonded debt. Such a differentiation, we think, is illogical. It seems wholly unreasonable to say that the state may lease the Western & Atlantic Railroad and use the rentals for whatever purpose the General Assembly may in its discretion direct, and yet that, if the General Assembly undertakes to anticipate these revenues—which it could have caused to be paid in a lump sum in advance, if it had so provided in the lease—by discounting them, the funds then must take a different course. The inherent nature or character of the state's right to receive the money from the lessees for the use of its railroad is certainly not so radically changed by the mere authorization by the General Assembly to hasten its receipt of such revenue by discounting it; and such a construction, we think, is entirely too literal and strict to be fairly given to the constitutional phrase under consideration.

The General Assembly in 1897 (Georgia Laws 1897, pp. 70, 71) authorized the Prison Commission to establish a prison farm (Pen. Code 1910, § 1203), and declared (section 1206) that—

"The Commission shall sell, to the best advantage, all surplus products of the penitentiary, and shall apply the proceeds thereof to the maintenance of the institution as far as necessary. Should any surplus funds arise from this source, they shall be paid into the state treasury annually; and the Commission shall, at the end of each quarter, make to the Governor a detailed report of all such transactions: Provided, the Commission shall have authority to furnish such surplus products, or any part thereof, to the Georgia State Sanitarium, the Academy for the Blind, at Macon, and to the School for the Deaf, at Cave Spring, should this be found practicable."

In 1905 (Georgia Laws 1905, p. 127; Pen. Code, § 1237 et seq.) the General Assembly established the Georgia State Reformatory, and declared (Pen. Code, § 1255) that—

"The Commission shall sell to the best advantage all agricultural products not used in the reformatory, and shall apply the proceeds thereof to the maintenance of the institution as far as necessary. Should any surplus funds arise from this source, they shall be paid into the state treasury annually; and the Commission shall at the end of each quarter make to the Governor a detailed report of all such transactions."

So these constitute two instances (and others might be cited) where the property of the state in the form of surplus funds derived from the sale, by legislative authority, of agricultural products received from the state's farms, were paid into the treasury of the state as a part of the general fund, and not as a part of the public property fund, to be exclusively applied to the payment of the state's bonded debt. Although these statutes providing for the disposition of the surplus fund derived from the sale of the state's agricultural products were enacted nearly a quarter of a century ago, no contention has ever been made, so far as we are aware, that such statutes are unconstitutional, and that the funds we have referred to constitute a part of the "public property fund."

It is argued for the plaintiff in error that, if the state can sell the rentals of the Western & Atlantic Railroad for 5 years, it can sell them for 20 years, or for 50 years. At least within reasonable limits, that may be true. It is further claimed that it would impair the sale value of the railroad property for the state to grant a long lease, and then sell the rentals. This may also be true. But is there any constitutional limitation against the General Assembly exercising its discretion in this respect? The constitutional provision in question constitutes no lien or mortgage on the Western & Atlantic Railroad. It is merely a direction, a binding direction, of course, to the General Assembly, that, "whenever it may authorize the sale," if it ever does so authorize, the proceeds shall be used to pay the bonded debt of the state. The Legislature is not required to sell the railroad, and it is not bound to maintain it or to protect its sale value in any other way, so far as any constitutional requirement is concerned. The Legislature, if it saw fit to do so, could lease the railroad for so small a rental that no one would care to buy it. This would reduce its sale value, but it would not be an act contrary to the Constitution. In substance we are dealing with the power of that body supreme in its discretion (except as limited by direct constitutional language), the Legislature, of earning and using revenue from this valuable piece of property, which it has the discretion to sell, but which it may use as it sees fit until it does decide to sell. If and when the Legislature authorizes the sale, the constitutional direction will come into play. Until a sale is authorized the legislative discretion is supreme and untrammelled. It may be unwise to depreciate the future value of this property to the state by converting unearned rentals into their present cash value. That is a debatable question, a question that has already been debated and decided by that body which, under our Constitution, must decide it; but it is not contrary to anything written into our Constitution for the General Assembly to do.

[2] 2. It is further said in the response that an absolute mandate should not be issued:

"Because the constitutional scheme for the administration of the finances of the state of Georgia limits all expenditures in one year to the revenues derived from all sources during that year; and it is unlawful, illegal, and contrary to the Constitution of the state to anticipate revenues to be received by the state in future years for the purpose of meeting obligations in preceding years."

No scheme or fiscal policy for the state appears in any direct or express language of the Constitution limiting all expenditures for the state in any one year to the revenues of the state derived from all sources during that year, and declaring that the revenues shall not be anticipated. Nor does any such fiscal policy arise by necessary implication from the constitutional declarations cited in this ground of the response, namely, those conferring the power of taxation on the General Assembly, limiting the rate of taxation to five mills for any one year, providing that all revenue and appropriation bills shall originate in the House, and that the state shall contract no debt except to supply such temporary deficiency as may exist in the treasury in any year from necessary delay in collecting the taxes for that year, limiting the amount to be so borrowed, and declaring that it shall be repaid out of the taxes levied for the year in which the loan is made.

As already held, this legislative act does not seek to authorize the creation of a debt, but is evidently designed to provide for the payment of debts owing by the state, and to accomplish this end it authorizes the sale of the state's right to receive the rentals of the Western & Atlantic Railroad for a limited period in the future. There is nothing in the Constitution prohibiting the General Assembly from anticipating revenues of this character, nor requiring it, in leasing that road, from time to time to allot each year's rental of the property to that particular year's income or revenue to be used in discharging the appropriations for that year.

As quite applicable to the present case we quote from Gray v. McLendon, 134 Ga. 224, 259, 67 S. E. 859, 875, as follows:

"In Cooley's Const. Lim. * * * it is said: * * * The courts are not the guardians of the rights of the people of the state except as those rights are secured by some constitutional provision which comes within their judicial cognizance. The protection against unwise or oppressive legislation within constitutional bounds is by an appeal to the justice and patriotism of the representatives of the people. If this fail, the people in their sovereign capacity can correct the evil; but courts cannot assume their rights. The judiciary can only arrest the execution of a statute when it conflicts with the Constitution. It cannot run a race of opinions upon points of right, reason, and expediency with the lawmaking power.' In 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1087, it is said: 'A statute should not be annulled on the vague ground of its conflict with the general latent spirit supposed to pervade or underlie the Constitution, but which neither its terms nor its implications clearly disclose.' See, in this connection, Flint v. Foster, 5 Ga. 194 (48 Am. Dec. 248); Plumb v. Christie, 103 Ga. 686, 692 (30 S. E. 759, 42 L. R. A. 181). * * * The Constitution of this state (Civil Code, § 5784) provides: 'The General Assembly shall have power to make all laws and ordinances consistent with this Constitution, and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, which they shall deem necessary and proper for the welfare of the state.' A law is void, or not void, as measured by this clause of the Constitution."

[3] 3. The respondent further says that he was legally bound to refuse to countersign the warrant referred to in the petition, for the reason that the warrant is illegal and void:

"Because the Governor of the state of Georgia has no lawful power or authority to draw a warrant against funds belonging to the state, when said funds will be paid into the state treasury, and said warrant becoming payable, after the expiration of the term of office for which the Governor signing said warrant was elected, His Excellency, Gov. Thomas W. Hardwick, the petitioner in the above-stated case, having been elected for a term of office which will expire prior to the time said funds will be paid into the treasury and such warrant payable, to wit, prior to August 1, 1923."

This ground of the response is not meritorious. It is true that in Fletcher v. Renfro, 56 Ga. 674, some doubt was expressed as to whether a Governor could legally draw a warrant which would be effective beyond his term of office. No ruling, however, was made on the point; and, moreover, the warrant there referred to, and held not to create a debt, but to be only a license or power authorizing the treasurer to pay, was the usual and ordinary executive warrant, and not one, as in this case, where a legislative act expressly empowered the Governor to draw warrants against a special, specified fund, to sell and discount the warrants to the purchaser, receive the purchase price, and deposit that in the treasury for the purpose of creating a fund for the payment of the already existing obligations of the state as designated in the legislative act. We are not aware of any legal reason why the General Assembly cannot authorize the Governor to exercise the power to issue and dispose of warrants as the act provides.

[4, 5] 4, 5. The holdings announced in the fourth and fifth headnotes need no elaboration.

[6] 6. In view of the rulings hereinbefore made, it was not error to grant the mandamus absolute requiring the comptroller general to countersign the executive warrant presented to him.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur, except BECK, P. J. and HILL, J., who dissent.

HILL, J. Article 7, § 13, par. 1, of the Constitution of the state (Civil Code of 1910, § 6570) provides as follows:

"The proceeds of the sale of the Western & Atlantic, Macon & Brunswick, or other railroads held by the state, and any other property owned by the state, whenever the General Assembly may authorize the sale of the whole or any part thereof, shall be applied to the payment of the bonded debt of the state, and shall not be used for any other purpose whatever, so long as the state has any existing bonded debt: Provided, that the proceeds of the sale of the Western & Atlantic Railroad shall be applied to the payment of the bonds for which said railroad has been mortgaged, in preference to all other bonds."

In construing the words of a Constitution the ordinary meaning is to be given them. Even where a word having an acquired and fixed technical, as well as a popular meaning, is used in the Constitution, the courts will generally accord to it its ordinary significance, unless the very nature of the subject indicates, or the text suggests, that it is used in its technical sense. 6 Am. & Eng. Encl. of Law, 924, 925. Applying the above rule, the language of the Constitution, as quoted above, is clear. Besides, no technical language is used. After mentioning certain specific railroad property, including the Western & Atlantic Railroad, which, if sold, must be applied to the payment of the bonded debt of the state, the Constitution declares, "and any other property owned by the state." whenever the General Assembly may authorize the sale of the whole or any part thereof, shall be applied to the payment of the bonded debt of the state, "and shall not be used for any other purpose whatever," etc. Can language be clearer? "Ita lex scripta est." The fundamental law of the state is so written. The rent of the Western & Atlantic Railroad is admittedly "property," and when this "property" is sold by authority of the Legislature the proceeds thereof must be applied, under the mandate of the Constitution, to the payment of the bonded indebtedness of the state. The Legislature, by the act of 1921 quoted in the majority opinion, seeks to authorize the sale of the rental of the Western & Atlantic Railroad for 5 years, and to turn the proceeds thereof into the general fund of the state for general purposes. This, in my opinion, cannot be done under the provision of the Constitution quoted above. The act is repugnant to the above constitutional provision. If the rent for five years can be sold, the rent for 45 years—the life of the lease—can be sold, and to do that would be to impair the value of, and virtually to sell, the road itself; for no one would buy the road if it was put up for sale with its entire rental for 45 years sold in advance. In interpreting the Constitution words are not only presumed to have been employed in their natural and ordinary meaning, but the instrument itself must be interpreted in the light of the circumstances attending its creation. 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, pp. 624, 625. One cannot read the proceedings of the constitutional convention of 1877 (See Jour. Const. 1877, 68; Small's Debates, 47 et seq.; Park v. Candler, 114 Ga. 466, 481, 40 S. E. 523 et seq.) and not be impressed with the idea that the framers of the Constitution intended that, when the Western & Atlantic Railroad "and any other property of the State" (italics mine) should be sold by authority of the Legislature, the proceeds thereof should be applied to the payment of the bonded debt of the state. See Park v. Candler, 113 Ga. 647, 656, 39 S. E. 89.

It is argued by counsel for defendant in error that to the language "any other property owned by the state" is to be applied the doctrine, "noscitur a sociis;" and in certain cases this rule is to be applied in construing statutes. But it will be observed in this case that the provision as to the proceeds of the sale of the two railroads, the Western & Atlantic and the Macon & Brunswick, is followed by the words "or other railroads held by the state." This language "or other railroads held by the state," it would seem, exhausts the subject of the sale of the railroad property, and leaves no room for the application of the maxim, "Noscitur a sociis;" and, when the general term of "any other property owned by the state" is employed, it becomes comprehensive and actually includes what the words import, all property of any kind, and is not limited in its application by the maxim just quoted. From the last clause of the Constitution itself quoted above it is provided that in case of the sale of the Western & Atlantic Railroad the proceeds shall be applied to "the payment of the bonds for which said railroad has been mortgaged, in preference to all other bonds." And it is a part of the financial history of the state that, in borrowing money, the state has always held out the ownership of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, worth millions of dollars, as an asset with which the state could pay the debt, should it desire to sell the property without taxing her citizens for that purpose. The courts will take judicial cognizance of the fact that the state owes a large bonded debt.

It is true that neither in the debates in the constitutional convention nor in the Constitution itself are the words "rentals" or "rentals of the Western & Atlantic Railroad," or rentals of any other property owned by the state, expressly used. And why should they be? For a much broader term is used, viz. "any other property owned by the state," which includes "rentals," for it is admitted that the rentals are "property." But it is contended that this means "tangible property," "corpus, and not income." No such restriction is in the written Constitution itself. These words must be construed into the Constitution if such a meaning is given the word "property." It is also true that not a dollar of the rentals of the Western & Atlantic Railroad has ever been applied to the bonded debt of the state, but it is likewise true that the Legislature has never before authorized the sale of the rentals for even one year; and the mandatory provision of the Constitution is, "Whenever the General Assembly may authorize the sale of the whole or any part thereof, the proceeds shall be applied," etc. The income for one year may go without sale into the general fund to help defray the expenses of that year; for it has not been sold by authority. But that is quite a different proposition from the Legislature authorizing the sale of 5 years' rental of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, and turning the proceeds into the general fund. Whenever an authorized sale is made, the Constitution is mandatory and declares that the proceeds shall be applied to the payment of the bonded debt of the state. One year's income within the year would not impair the sale of the corpus of the property, but 5 years' sale would to that extent, and the sale of 45 years' rental would well-nigh destroy the sale of the property itself. This was never dreamed of by the framers of the Constitution, as gathered from the debates in the convention. On the contrary, the debates tend to show that all of this, and other magnificent and valuable property, was intended to be in the nature of a security for the public bonded debt, and to lessen taxation, etc. But to give the act under review the construction asked would in its last analysis be to virtually destroy this property, if the entire rentals are to be sold by authority of the Legislature, and the proceeds devoted to other purposes than the one contemplated by the Constitution itself. The judiciary can only declare an act void when it conflicts with some provision of the Constitution; but in the view we take of the act of 1921 under consideration it is in violation of article 7, § 13, par. 1, of the Constitution of 1877 (Civil Code of 1910, § 6570); and I am constrained, therefore, to dissent from the decision of the majority of the court in this case.

I am authorized by Mr. Presiding Justice BECK to say that he concurs in the foregoing dissent.

Bills and notes \S 489(6)—In absence of plea of non est factum, note properly introduced in evidence, although execution not proved.

Higgins sued Chastain upon a promissory note. Chastain defended upon the ground that on a certain day in a named city he had paid to the payee of the note a certain sum in full payment and satisfaction of the principal and interest on the note sued on. When the case came on for trial, the note sued on was tendered in evidence. The defendant objected to the introduction of the note upon the ground that its execution had not been proved, and upon the ground that his plea made it necessary for the plaintiff to prove the execution of the note. These objections were overruled, and the note admitted in evidence. The defendant offered no testimony in support of his plea of payment. It not having been error for the court to overrule the objections to the introduction of the note in evidence, there having been no plea of non est factum filed, and the only issue being upon the plea of payment, it was proper for the judge, who by agreement was trying the case without a jury, to render judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the full principal and interest due upon said promissory note.

Sufficiency of evidence.

The verdict was authorized by the evidence, and the excerpts from the charge of the court, as complained of by the plaintiff in error, do not require a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Haralson County; F. A. Irwin, Judge.

Action by J. W. A. Rowland against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

J. Branham and Maddox & Doyal, all of Rome, and Griffith & Matthews, of Buchanan, for plaintiff in error.

BROYLES, C. J. The facts of this case were reviewed by this court in the case of Central of Georgia Railway Co. v. Reid, 23 Ga. App. 694, 99 S. E. 235. Reid, the defendant in error in that case, and Rowland, the defendant in error in the instant case, were riding together in the same buggy when the mule drawing it ran away and threw them out, causing the alleged injuries sued for in each case. Each plaintiff alleged the same acts of negligence against the same defendant.

This court in its decision of the Reid Case laid down the principles of law that controlled that case, and that control the present case. Under that decision and the facts of this case, the verdict rendered upon the trial now under review was authorized by the evidence. It is true that the two excerpts from the charge which are complained of in the motion for a new trial are somewhat confused and misleading, and perhaps subject to other exceptions, but when these excerpts are considered in the light of the entire charge and the facts of the case—including the small verdict ($250) in favor of the plaintiff—we do not think they require another trial of the case.

Judgment affirmed.

(No. 12768.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Dec. 14, 1921.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. Negligence Ⓒ2—Legal duty essential.

Legal liability results only from a breach of legal duty, which implies the existence of some legal relation.

2. Master and servant Ⓒ88(5) — Volunteer defined.

One who, without any employment whatever, but at the request of a servant who has no authority to employ other servants, voluntarily undertakes to perform service for a master, is a mere volunteer, and the master does not owe him any duty, except not to injure him willfully and wantonly after his peril is discovered.

3. Master and servant Ⓒ257 — Allegations held not to show breach of duty to volunteer.

The allegations of the petition failed to show a breach of any duty of the defendants to the plaintiff in connection with the act in which he is alleged to have been injured, and showed that this act was simply a voluntary one on his part, in which he assumed all the risk.

Error from Superior Court, Dawson County; J. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by R. M. Early against Houser & Houser. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Early sued for damages on account of personal injuries, making substantially the following allegations: The defendants were the owners of and operated a public ginnery, to which the public was invited to bring cotton to be ginned, and for the ginning of which they charged a stipulated sum as compensation. The gin was generally operated by the defendants, "with the assistance of Jack Williams (sometimes called Jack Bruce), who was an employee of said" defendants. On the day of the alleged injury the defendants had gone away from the gin and left the entire management and control and operation of the ginnery under the control and management of Williams alone, and at the time of the injury he was the agent of the defendants, and, as such, had entire control and management of and was operating the ginnery. On the day of the injury the plaintiff was a customer at the gin, having on that day carried a bale of seed cotton to the gin, and was then and there invited to place the cotton at the proper place to have it ginned, and was waiting to have it ginned. It is alleged that while he was unloading his cotton a belt running from a counter shaft to a pulley on the gin slipped and ran off of the pulley on the counter shaft, causing the gin to stop, and the counter shaft continued to revolve at a very rapid and increased speed; that when the belt ran off, the said Williams, who was then operating the gin alone, and had entire charge of it, having no assistance or help near or within call of him, called upon and requested and directed the plaintiff to assist him in putting the belt back on the pulley of the counter shaft; that this was an emergency in which it was necessary that the belt should be put back on the pulley, not only to avoid injury to the machinery, but in order that the ginning should continue and not be delayed, and in order that the plaintiff's cotton should be ginned and not delayed; that in order to lend a helping hand and in order that the gin might continue to run the plaintiff immediately complied with the request, and in so doing he came very close to the counter shaft, and his clothing was caught upon an unguarded and projecting set screw on the shaft, and he thereby received the injury for which he sued. The court sustained a demurrer to the petition, and the plaintiff excepted.

W. B. Sloan and H. H. Petry, both of Gainesville, for plaintiff in error.

E. C. Brannon, B. R. Taylor, and A. W. Vandiviere, all of Dawsonville, and O. J. Lilly, of Gainesville, for defendants in error.

HILL, J. [2] The allegations of the petition show that the plaintiff was a volunteer, and, in undertaking to render a voluntary service to the employee of the defendants who was operating the gin, he did so at his own risk. These allegations, most favorably considered, show that Williams, who was in charge of the gin, was operating it simply as an employee of the defendants, and as such employee had no authority to employ assistance. It was insisted that the plaintiff was not merely a volunteer, that he was at the gin in compliance with an invitation of the owners thereof, the defendants, and that he was therefore a licensee with an interest; that in addition an agent of the defendants, who at the time was in charge of the gin, requested him to assist; and that Williams, the employee, being in sole charge of the gin, was the alter ego of the defendants, and the defendants were liable for the acts of Williams. There are some authorities which sustain the view here presented, but we think the question is controlled by decisions of this court and of the Supreme Court adverse to the position of learned counsel for the plaintiff in error. While there are some general statements in the petition which would indicate that Williams was acting as vice principal of the defendants, there are no facts alleged which would justify that conclusion; the only facts alleged being that he was operating the gin in the absence of the defendants, as their employee. It is alleged that the plaintiff was invited to take his cotton to the gin for the purpose of having it ginned, but this invitation was not broad enough to authorize him to intermeddle with the operation of the gin at the request of Williams, and when he did so he was acting voluntarily and at his own risk.

"To create the relation of master and servant there must be some contract or some act on the part of one person which expressly or impliedly recognizes another as his servant." Atlanta & West Point R. Co. v. West, 121 Ga. 641(1), 49 S. E. 711, 67 L. R. A. 704, 104 Am. St. Rep. 179.

[1] So far as appears from the petition, the owners of this gin were guilty of no breach of any duty to the plaintiff, and there cannot be a legal liability except upon a breach of some legal duty.

"Where a volunteer engages in work undertaken in compliance with an unauthorized request of an employee of the defendant, the latter owes him none of the obligations of a master toward a servant, but is only bound to use care not to injure him after notice of his peril." Atlanta & West Point R. Co. v. West, supra; Cooper v. Lowery, 4 Ga. App. 120, 60 S. E. 1015; Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Mullins, 7 Ga. App. 381, 66 S. E. 1028; Southern Ry. Co. v. Duke, 16 Ga. App. 673, 85 S. E. 974; Rhodes v. Georgia R. & Banking Co., 84 Ga. 320, 10 S. E. 922, 20 Am. St. Rep. 382.

[3] The allegations of the petition are not sufficient to show such an emergency as would authorize the plaintiff voluntarily to interfere and undertake the risk of working with the dangerous revolving machinery. The fact that an employee in charge of the gin requested him to do so did not warrant him in doing so. Certainly his act was not one the responsibility for which he could legally impose upon the owners of the gin, who were under no obligations whatever to him in so far as his meddling with the machinery was concerned. The relation of master and servant was not created by this unauthorized request of the employee in charge of the gin. The invitation extended to the plaintiff by the owners of the gin was to bring his cotton there for the purpose of having it ginned, and certainly such invitation was not sufficient to justify him in undertaking to help in the operation of the gin. Under the decisions in Atlanta & West Point R. Co. v. West, and Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Mullins, supra, we think the judgment of the lower court sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the petition should be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

Assault and battery \S 51, 91—Mere preparation not assault; evidence insufficient to sustain conviction.

Mere preparation to commit an injury, unaccompanied by a physical effort to do so, is not an assault.

Gene Bowden was convicted of an assault, and he brings error. Reversed.

W. M. Clark, of Forsyth, for plaintiff in error.

E. M. Owen, Sol. Gen., of Zebulon, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. The defendant was convicted of an assault, and the evidence discloses that the only act relied on to sustain the conviction was as follows:

"He called me 'a damn rascal,' and picked up two rocks. He held one in each hand. (Here witness illustrated by holding the right hand backward and higher, holding the left hand down in a natural position.) He drew the right hand and arm back as if to throw. I said: 'You have the advantage. Why don't you kill me with the rocks?' He was on one side of a wire fence, and I was on the other side. We were about as far apart as defendant's counsel and I now are—about 12 or 14 feet. He did not throw the rocks nor try to throw them. I turned my back to him and walked away."

In Brown v. State, 95 Ga. 481, 20 S. E. 495, the holding is as follows:

"Mere preparation to commit a violent injury upon the person of another, unaccompanied by a physical effort to do so, will not justify a conviction for an assault; and therefore where the evidence showed that during an altercation between the person alleged to have been assaulted, and two other persons acting in concert, one of the latter picked up a stone but made no attempt to cast it at the former, who was about 20 steps distant, neither of the two persons so acting in concert could be lawfully convicted of an assault."

The evidence in the instant case did not authorize a conviction, and the court erred in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Judgment reversed.

Since the petition does not affirmatively show any contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, or any negligence on the part of the driver together with any fact or circumstance which would render the plaintiff liable for any such negligence, the judge did not err in overruling the demurrers.

Upon the trial of the defendants, a witness for the state, while being questioned by the solicitor general, made a statement which reflected upon the character of one of the defendants, and which was not responsive to the question propounded. No objection was made to the admission of this statement, nor was any motion subsequently made to rule it out; but counsel for the accused moved for a mistrial of the case because of such statement. The court declined to grant a mistrial, saying, "If you could get a mistrial every time a witness says something he oughtn't to say, you would never get a trial." The judge did, however, on his own motion, rule out the statement of the witness, and specifically instructed the jury not to consider it in any way in passing upon the case. In view of the above-recited facts, this court cannot hold as a matter of law that the trial judge abused his discretion in denying the motion for a mistrial. Dec. 14, 1921.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)Insurance — 360(4)—Retention of worthless premium check held not to make insurer liable on policy.

The conditional receipt, given by the life insurance company for the premium check tendered on the last day for payment, was not in terms or in legal effect a receipt for the premium, but only for the check, coupled with what amounted to an extension agreement conditioned, however, upon payment of the check on its presentation. Here, contrary to the facts in Veal v. Security Mutual Life Insurance Co., 6 Ga. App. 721, 85 S. E. 714, the company did not accept the check as in payment of the premium, nor did it even, after notice of dishonor of the check, continue to claim liability and demand payment thereon, but, on the contrary, it expressly limited its acceptance of the check to its actual payment, and, after the check had been dishonored, promptly notified the insured of the policy's lapse, coupling the notice with an unaccepted offer of reinstatement, based, not upon the payment of the check, but upon the payment of the premium, together with interest thereon from the date on which the premium became due. The dishonored check should have been voluntarily returned; but, since the action taken by the defendant company had placed it beyond its power to enforce payment thereon, its mere physical retention would not render the company liable on the policy, which had been declared lapsed, and which the insured on invitation had failed to reinstate. Under the agreed statement of facts under which this case was tried, the judge did not err in directing a verdict in favor of the defendant. See State Life Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 147 Ga. 287, 93 S. Error from Superior Court, Haralson County; F. A. Irwin, Judge.

Action by H. M. Chandler against the American Central Life Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant on a directed verdict, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Helen M. Chandler sued the American Central Life Insurance Company upon an insurance policy for $1,000, of which she was beneficiary, which the defendant had issued upon the life of Luna E. Chandler. The pleadings and the agreed statement of facts upon which the case was tried show that the policy was issued and delivered on July 28, 1915, that the first annual premium of $30.83, due July 28, 1915, was paid, that the second annual premium, due July 28, 1916, was paid, and that the third annual premium, due July 28, 1917, was not paid, but that on August 27, 1917, within the 31 days of grace allowed for the payment of premiums, the insurance company received at its home office a check drawn by Luna E. Chandler, and payable to it, for the amount of the premium, which check was dated at Tallapoosa, Ga., August 24, 1917, and was drawn on the Bank of Tallapoosa, Ga. Upon receipt of the check the company issued a premium receipt, dated August 27, 1917, and mailed it to the insured. The receipt is set out in full in the plaintiff's petition, and contains the following stipulation:

"Any tender is accepted subject to the terms and conditions of the policy, and to ultimate cash payment."

On the face of the receipt are the number of the policy, the amount of the premium, and the name of the assured, and at the bottom the word "Over," and on the reverse side appear the several stipulations and the signatures of two officers of the company. The check was duly presented for payment, and payment was refused because the assured did not have sufficient funds on deposit with the drawee bank to cover the check. On September 15, 1917, the company sent to the assured a letter, stating, among other things, the following:

"This check comes back to us to-day, however, unpaid, and the policy therefore is in the same position as though your check had not been received. We are inclosing reinstatement application for your completion, which we ask that you return to us at once with your remittance, $30.83, plus interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from July 28, 1917, to the date of such remittance, when the reinstatement application will have our prompt attention."

The company received no reply to this letter, and on September 28, 1917, sent to the assured a letter calling attention to the fact that the premium had not been paid, and requesting him to forward $30.83, plus interest from July 28, 1917, and also to sign the reinstatement application which was inclosed. The assured did not reply to either of the letters, and took no action in regard to the premium or check. On August 27, 1917, the date on which the check was received by the company in Indianapolis, the assured had on deposit in the Bank of Tallapoosa, subject to check, $5.29; and from August 27, 1917, to November 28, 1917, the assured's account with the bank was either overdrawn or amounted to less than $30.83.

The assured died on March 16, 1918, and proofs of death were furnished to the company by the beneficiary, and payment of the policy was refused by the company. Under the terms of the policy, it would not have had any extension insurance value until after the payment of the third annual premium. On motion of the defendant's attorneys the court directed a verdict for the defendant.

Dec. 14, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Recovery under contract properly limited.

On consideration of the demurrer to the petition, the court did not err in passing an order limiting the plaintiff's right of recovery to $1,186.37, nor thereafter in refusing to allow him to introduce evidence for the purpose of showing that he was entitled to recover an additional sum. Nor was it error to direct a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $1,000.

2. Municipal corporations §250—Architect held not entitled to extra compensation, where changes in specifications were necessitated by increased costs.

In an action by a architect to recover for services in making plans for a building to be erected by defendant city under a contract providing for additional compensation for material changes in the plans and specifications after approval, where it appeared that changes were made necessary by the increase in costs, held, that plaintiff was not entitled to extra compensation; the intent of the contract not including changes necessary to bring the costs within the appropriation made by the city.

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; P. W. Meldrim, Judge.

Action by Henrik Wallin against the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Savannah. Judgment for defendant and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Henrik Wallin sued the mayor and aldermen of the city of Savannah for breach of contract. The contract, as set forth in the petition, shows that Wallin was engaged by the city as architect for a certain building to be erected by the city. The material parts of the contract, so far as this suit is concerned, are as follows:

"Art. 2. The said Wallin shall render complete professional services as architect for said building, consisting of preparing preliminary studies, plans, and sketches, which are to be restudied and revised by the said city or its agents until the same are satisfactory to and approved by the said city, after which said Wallin shall perform all services required or necessary in the matter of plans, working drawings, and specifications, detailed drawings, forms of building contracts, general direction and supervision of the construction of said building, certificates of payments due contractors and others performing labor or furnishing material in connection with said building, and all other services in connection with the construction of said auditorium building properly chargeable to an architect, all of which services to be the customary services of an architect as defined by the American Institute of Architects, except that in case of conflict the express terms of this agreement shall be binding."

"Art. 6. The said city is to compensate the said Wallin for his services as architect, and is to pay as such compensation a sum equal to six per cent. (6%) of the total cost of the completed building, provided such sum does not exceed the maximum amount of commissions hereinafter named. Payments to the said Wallin are to be made as the work progresses, in the following order: Upon the acceptance of the preliminary studies, one fifth of the estimated fee; upon the completion of specifications and general working drawings one fifth additional, and an additional one-fifth when the general contract is let by the city, the remainder being due from time to time in proportion to the amount of service rendered. Until an actual estimate is received, charges are based upon the proposed cost of the work and payments received are on account of the entire fee, but in no event is the said Wallin to receive commissions of more than a total [of] eight thousand one hundred ($8,100.00) dollars, unless the plans, after acceptance by the city, are, through no fault of the said Wallin, materially changed by the city.

"Art. 7. If, after the plans, specifications, and scheme of work have been accepted and approved by the city, through no fault of the said Wallin, material changes are made by the city in the same, or if the architect be put to extra labor or expense by the delinquency or insolvency of a contractor, the architect shall be paid for such additional services and expense in a sum to be agreed upon between the city and said Wallin.

"Art. 8. Should it be found, after the completion by the said Wallin of the preliminary studies and the plans and specifications and general working drawings for the construction of the auditorium, that a contractor acceptable to the city has not submitted a bid on the same in the amount within the sum set apart by the city for the construction of said auditorium by the city, then the said Wallin is obligated to make all necessary revisions and changes in the plans and specifications, working drawings, or other documents, as will enable the cost of the auditorium building to be reduced to a sum within the amount set apart by the city for the construction of said auditorium; all without extra payment or compensation to the said Wallin; all revisions and changes in the plans, specifications, and working drawings made shall be submitted to and approved by the city."

The petition admitted that the plaintiff had been paid by the city on this contract $7,526.63, and showed that under the contract he had performed other services, which entitled him to recover the sum of $1,186.37. The petition alleged also that by reason of certain facts set forth therein the plaintiff was entitled to recover the additional sum of $3,240. The defendant demurred to the petition generally and specially. The court overruled the general demurrer, but sustained the ground of the special demurrer attacking the plaintiff's claim as to the $3,240 item. After striking this item the court passed an order limiting the plaintiff's right of recovery to $1,186.37. To this order the plaintiff excepted pendente lite, and the case proceeded to trial. Upon the trial the plaintiff admitted that he was entitled to recover only $1,000 on account of the extra services for which the petition claimed $1,186.37. The court refused to allow the plaintiff to testify as to the $3,240 item, and, upon motion of the defendant's counsel, directed a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $1,000. To the action of the court in rejecting the plaintiff's proffered testimony and in directing a verdict for only $1,000, the plaintiff excepted.

Shelby Myrick and Edwin A. Cohen, both of Savannah, for defendant in error.

BROYLES, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). [1, 2] In our view of this case the court did not err in sustaining that ground of the special demurrer which challenged the plaintiff's right to recover the $3,240 alleged to be due him by the defendant. The salient facts upon this phase of the case, as shown by the amended petition and the contract, are that the plaintiff agreed to draw the plans for the building and supervise its construction, all for the sum of $8,100, unless the plans were materially changed by the city through no fault of his; that he drew certain plans and specifications, which were accepted by the city, but, because of the unprecedented advances in the price of labor and material, none of the bids received from contractors was within the price fixed for the construction of the building, and subsequently all bids were rejected, and he was compelled by the city, through no fault of his, to alter his original plans and specifications, in order to bring the construction of the building within the amount appropriated by the city. It is for these alterations in the original plans that he claims the additional sum of $3,240, and he bases his claim thereto on article 7 of the contract.

We do not think this article, construed singly or in connection with the entire contract, supports this contention. The changes in the original plans and specifications became necessary, because there were no bids submitted within the amount appropriated by the city for the construction of the building as planned and outlined by the plaintiff in his original drawings, and this very contingency was expressly provided for in article 8 of the contract. The learned counsel for the plaintiff contend that, when article 8 of the contract is construed in the light of articles 2, 6, and 7 thereof, it means that, if the revisions and changes provided for in article 8 are occasioned through no fault of the architect, then he shall receive compensation therefor. We do not think such a construction of the contract is a reasonable one. It seems clear to us that, under a proper construction of the contract as a whole, and the plain and unambiguous terms of article 8 thereof the plaintiff was not entitled to any compensation for the alterations of the original plans and drawings which were made necessary to bring the cost of the building within the appropriation made by the city for its erection.

It follows, from what has been said, that the court did not err in sustaining the special demurrer to the petition, and in passing an order limiting the plaintiff's right of recovery to $1,186.37, nor in excluding the testimony offered in support of the $3,240 item, nor in directing a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $1,000.

1. Contracts \S 93(2)—Ignorance of contract no defense where signed without reading; absence of spectacles no excuse for failure to read contract.

It is well settled that one who executes a written contract without reading it cannot avoid liability thereon because he was ignorant of the contents of the contract, when he was not induced to sign the contract by any false representation amounting to fraud on the part of the person with whom he was dealing. Barnes v. Slaton Drug Co., 21 Ga. App. 580, 94 S. E. 896; Tinsley v. Gullett Gin Co., 21 Ga. App. 512 (2), 94 S. E. 892. The fact that a party who signs a contract did not read it because he did not have his spectacles with him furnishes no excuse for his failure to read the contract or to have some one read it to him. Hanes v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 20 Ga. App. 129, 92 S. E. 896.

2. Reading contract not prevented by fraud or emergency.

There was no evidence tending to show that the defendant was prevented from reading the contract by any emergency, or by artifice or fraud perpetrated by the opposite party or by any one else, such as would reasonably prevent him from reading it.

3. Defendant held not induced to sign contract by fraud.

The contract signed by the defendant, on which he was sued, was a plain, unambiguous contract in writing, and there is no evidence that the defendant was induced to make the contract by any representation amounting to fraud, and no reason appears why he should not have complied with the terms of his contract. The verdict directed by the trial judge was the only one that could have been legally rendered under the evidence, and the plea contained no merit.

ROBINSON v. STATE. (No. 12940.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Dec. 13, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Receiving stolen goods — 7(6) — Indictment held sufficiently supported by proof as to ownership.

An indictment for receiving stolen goods, which alleged the owners of the goods to be "Audley Hill & Co., a corporation" is sufficiently supported by proof that the goods belonged to Audley Hill Company, the evidence showing that both these names were applied to the same concern.

2. Indictment and information — 176 — Allegations and proof as to date held not to show commission of two separate offenses.

Although the indictment against the principal alleged that the larceny was committed on December 2, and the indictment against the accessory alleged that the stolen goods were received by him on December 4, and the proof showed that the larceny was really committed on the latter date, this does not show that the principal "committed two acts of larceny," and that the accessory had been convicted of the one with which the principal had no connection. The time alleged in an indictment is immaterial, provided it is within the statute of limitations for the particular offense for which the accused is being tried.

Error from City Court of Richmond County; J. O. O. Black, Jr., Judge.

A. P. Robinson was convicted of receiving stolen goods, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Fleming, of Augusta, for plaintiff in error.

W. Inman Curry, Sol., of Augusta, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Plaintiff in error was convicted of receiving stolen goods. The evidence authorized the verdict. The grounds of the amendment to the motion for a new trial are all amplifications of the general grounds. There is no merit in any of the contentions embraced in these grounds of the motion, and we will discuss only two of them.

[1] It is insisted that the verdict is without evidence to support it because: (1) "The ownership of the goods alleged to have been received by defendant, knowing them to be stolen, is described in the indictment as follows: 'The property of Audley Hill & Company, a corporation,' whereas the evidence shows there was no such corporation in existence as Audley Hill & Co.," but the corporate name is Audley Hill Company. A witness testified that the goods belonged to Audley Hill & Co.; that at the time the goods were stolen he was driving "one of the wagons of Audley Hill & Co.," and that he "went back to Audley Hill & Co.'s warehouse." Under the evidence in this case no other conclusion can be reached than that the two names were applied to the same corporation. The contention of plaintiff in error that the difference in name between Audley Hill & Co. and Audley Hill Company is a fatal variance is settled against him by a number of decisions of the appellate courts of this state.

"An indictment for larceny after trust, charging that the accused, after having been intrusted with money for the purpose of paying it to 'Dudley-Butts Lumber Company,' fraudulently converted the same to his own use, is sufficiently supported by evidence showing that the money which the accused converted was intended for payment to 'Dudley-Butts Sash, Door & Lumber Company,' it appearing that the two names were applied to the same corporation, and that it was as well known by one name as the other. 'The question is one of the identity of the party, * * * and not merely one of the identity of a name.' Jackson v. State, 76 Ga. 568; Rogers v. State, 90 Ga. 463." Smith v. State, 121 Ga. 613, 49 S. E. 677.

See, also, Edwards v. State, 121 Ga. 590 (3), 49 S. E. 674; Edwards v. State, 24 Ga. App. 653 (1), 101 S. E. 766, and citations.

[2] 2. The fact that the indictment in this case alleged the commission of the crime of receiving stolen goods as having been committed on December 4, and the indictment against the principal alleged that the goods were stolen on December 2, is no proof that the principal "committed two acts of larceny," nor that the goods received by the accused in this case were not the same goods stolen by the principal. The proof that the allegations in the two indictments referred to the same goods came from the principal, who swore:

"I admit I stole the goods [the goods described in the indictment against the accused in this case]. I was tried for stealing these goods, and am now serving a sentence on the chain gang."

It is a fundamental principal of our penal law that the state, in making out its case, is not confined to the day named in the indictment, but may prove the commission of the offense at any time prior to the return of the indictment, provided the time proven is within the statute of limitations for the particular offense for which the accused is being tried. Cole v. State, 120 Ga. 485, (2), 48 S. E. 156.

WASHINGTON v. JORDAN. (No. 12693.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Dec. 14, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Recovery on quantum meruit sustained.

A recovery on a quantum meruit for commissions on the sale of real estate was authorized by the evidence.

2. Work and labor §4(2)—Promise to pay for reasonable value of services implied.

Ordinarily when one renders services valuable to another, which the latter accepts, a promise is implied to pay the reasonable value thereof, and it is not necessary in such case to prove an express promise to pay for such services. Civil Code 1910, § 5513; Williamson v. Martin, 19 Ga. App. 425, 91 S. E. 510.

3. Brokers §56(1)—Owner may not himself sell to agent's customer so as to deprive him of his commission.

While the owner of real estate, by employing an agent to perfect the sale thereof, does not preclude himself from selling it, yet the owner must act in the utmost good faith with his agent, without any purpose of depriving him of his right to commissions for his services.

Moore v. May, 10 Ga. App. 198, 73 S. E. 29. And the owner cannot sell to his agent's customer and thus prevent the agent from receiving his commission. Gresham v. Connally, 114 Ga. 906, 41 S. E. 42.

4. Brokers §56(3)—Consummation of actual sale by owner does not deprive broker of commissions for services rendered.

Where a broker has been instrumental in procuring a purchaser, he is entitled to his commission notwithstanding the fact that the owner consummated the actual sale to the purchaser procured by the broker. Civ. Code 1910, § 3587; Graves v. Hunnicutt, 8 Ga. App. 99, 68 S. E. 558.

5. Appeal and error §1058(1)—Witnesses §268(1)—Exclusion of evidence as to whether plaintiff had registered as real estate agent not error, but if error, held cured by introduction of other evidence.

There was no error in the exclusion of the question propounded on cross-examination as to whether the plaintiff had registered as a real estate agent, under section 971 of the Civil Code of 1910. Even if there had been error in such ruling, it was cured by the fact that a broker's license, duly issued, was subsequently introduced in evidence.

6. Evidence §471(24)—Whether purchaser from principal was influenced by broker properly excluded.

Under the facts of this case there was no error in excluding from the evidence the answer to the question propounded to the purchaser of the property by the defendant, referring to the broker who had procured the sale, "Were you influenced by Mr. Jordan in the purchase of this property?" The case of Doonan v. Ives, 73 Ga. 295, relied upon by the plaintiff in error, is distinguished from the present case on the facts. In that case the owner of the real estate had testified that she did not know that the plaintiff, as a real estate agent, had been employed to sell her property, and this statement was corroborated by other evidence. Here the evidence was undisputed that the plaintiff, as broker, was employed by the defendant to sell the property and had actually carried on negotiations for that purpose with the person who subsequently purchased the property from the owner. Under these facts an answer by the purchaser to the question that the broker had not influenced him in the purchase of the property would have been simply an opinion without probative value.

7. Brokers §57(2)—Sale by principal on modified terms cannot defeat broker's right to commissions.

The law of this case is well settled and is this: If under his contract with the defendant the plaintiff performed work and rendered services in compliance with the contract, whether express or implied, and procured, as a result of his services, a customer for the property in question, and the owner, having information that the broker was negotiating with his customer, did himself, as owner, sell the property to the customer so procured by the broker, although with some modification of the terms on which the authority to sell the property had been given by the owner to the broker, the owner could not thereby defeat the payment of the broker's commission. This would be a fraudulent taking advantage of the broker's labor without paying for it. Doonan v. Ives, supra.

8. Denial of new trial affirmed.

No error of law appears, and the judgment overruling the motion for a new trial is affirmed. The motion to assess damages for bringing the case to this court for the purpose of delay is denied.

Commerce \S 33, 47.—Goods are in interstate commerce when delivered for continuous transportation to another state; passenger's undeclared intention to extend journey beyond state does not make transportation interstate.

Goods are in interstate commerce when they have been delivered for continuous transportation to a point of destination located in another state. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co., 227 U. S. 111, 123, 33 Sup. Ct. 229, 57 L. Ed. 442; Southern Pacific Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Com., 219 U. S. 498, 527, 31 Sup. Ct. 279, 55 L. Ed. 310; Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 6 Sup. Ct. 475, 29 L. Ed. 715. In order for a shipment, thus destined from the beginning for such continuous transportation, to be interstate in character, it is not required that it be originally routed by the initial carrier to a point of destination beyond the limits of the state, since the nature and essential character of the transportation is the controlling factor. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co., supra. See, also, Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Texas, 204 U. S. 403, 414, 27 Sup. Ct. 360, 51 L. Ed. 540; Penn. R. Co. v. Clark, 238 U. S. 456, 35 Sup. Ct. 896, 59 L. Ed. 1406; Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. De Fuentes, 236 U. S. 157, 35 Sup. Ct. 275, 59 L. Ed. 517. Thus, while the rulings made by this court in Augusta Brokerage Co. v. Central of Ga. Ry. Co., 5 Ga. App. 187, 62 S. E. 996, in the light of subsequent decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States, appear too broad in their statements, still, where, as in the instant case (contrary to what were the facts in Galveston, etc., Ry. Co. v. Woodbury, 254 U. S. 357, 41 Sup. Ct. 114, 65 L. Ed. —), the baggage was moved under an intrastate ticket, and where the journey itself was in no sense continuous, nor had ever been so declared or intended, the mere fact that the passenger may have intended, after remaining several days at the point of destination provided by the intrastate ticket, to extend her journey to another point beyond the limits of the state, could not be taken as such a fact as to render the initial travel and transportation interstate in character. "There is no presumption that a transportation when commenced is to be continued beyond the state limits." Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Texas, supra, 204 U. S. 414, 27 Sup. Ct. 363, 51 L. Ed. 540.

Error from City Court of Americus; W. M. Harper, Judge.

Action by M. T. Phillips against J. C. Davis, Agent, etc. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Plaintiff in the court below sued defendant for $739.05, the alleged value of a wardrobe trunk and contents, which the Central of Georgia Railway Company had checked as plaintiff's baggage on a ticket over its line from Americus, Ga., to Macon, Ga., and the loss of which defendant admitted. The only defense set up was that under the Act to Regulate Commerce of February 4, 1887 (chapter 104, 24 Stat. at L. 379; U. S. Comp. Stat. § 8563; 4 Fed. Stat. Ann. [2d. Ed.] p. 337), as amended by the Carmack Amendment of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. at L. 595, c. 3591, § 7; U. S. Comp. Stat. §§ 8604a, 8604aa; 4 Fed. Stat. Ann. [2d Ed.] p. 499), and by subsequent legislation, the carriage was interstate commerce, although the initial movement to Macon was intrastate under a local ticket because it was intended that the baggage should move from Americus to Greenville, S. C., and that the shipment was, therefore, controlled by rules 10 and 11 of the Baggage Tariff for Southern Territory, filed by the carrier with the Interstate Commerce Commission. These rules limit such liability of the carrier to $100, unless a greater value is declared by the passenger at the time of delivery to the carrier, and additional is paid at the rate of 10 cents for each $100 or fraction thereof above such maximum value. It is admitted that no such excess was declared, nor any payment therefor made to the carrier. While the evidence is undisputed that the passenger left Americus with the intention of returning to her home in Greenville, S. C., and that after arriving over the Central of Georgia at Macon upon a local ticket thereto she purchased (on a date not disclosed) an additional ticket to Greenville, and obtained a new baggage check routing her trunk over such line to Atlanta and thence over the Southern Railway to destination. It is also undisputed that the continuity of her trip from Americus to Greenville was broken by a two or three days' visit to relatives in Macon, that the trunk never actually moved under the interstate ticket and baggage check obtained at Macon, but was lost during transportation under the local ticket to Macon, and that at the time such local ticket and check were obtained at Americus no declaration appears to have been made by the passenger to the carrier as to any intention by her to make an interstate journey or that her baggage should so move. It was not contended that, if the shipment were intrastate, anything in the intrastate contract or under the laws of this state would relieve the carrier of liability for less than the full value. The court left to the jury the question as to whether the carriage was intrastate or interstate, under instructions that, if they found the latter, the maximum recovery would be $100.

The jury found for the plaintiff $370. Exception is taken to the court's refusal to grant the motion for new trial, based upon the general grounds.

BALKMAN v. STATE. (No. 13020.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Dec. 15, 1921.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Criminal law \S 134(1)—Motion for change of venue on ground of probable violence to defendant held improperly overruled.

Upon the motion to change the venue, the evidence was sufficient to reasonably show that the accused, if brought back to Miller county, tried, and acquitted, or even if he escaped the death penalty, would be in danger of being lynched or of having other violence done to him. The court therefore erred in overruling the motion.

Error from Superior Court, Miller County; W. C. Warrill, Judge.

Lit Balkman was charged with murder, a motion for change of venue was overruled, and he brings error. Reversed.

W. I. Geer, of Colquitt, and John R. Cooper and W. O. Cooper, Jr., both of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

B. T. Castellow, Sol. Gen., of Outhbert, and R. R. Arnold and E. O. Hill, both of Atlanta, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. The accused, a negro, was indicted in the county of Miller for the murder of a prominent white man, and was arrested and carried by the sheriff of the county to Albany, and placed in the jail there, from which a few days later he was transferred to the Bibb county jail. He made a motion for a change of venue, upon the grounds that he could not get a fair trial in the county where the homicide occurred, and that, if carried back to that county to stand trial there would be danger of his being lynched or of other violence being committed upon him. Upon the hearing of the motion the sheriff of Miller county testified that, immediately after the homicide, he arrested the accused and carried him to Albany and placed him in jail there, because he thought the excitement and passion of the people in Miller county were so great that it would not be safe for the accused to remain in that county; that a few days afterwards the accused was transferred to the Bibb county jail; that it was his opinion that, if the accused were brought back to Miller county, tried, and given a death sentence, no mob violence would be done him, but that, if he escaped a death sentence, the people of Miller county would not be satisfied, and violence might be done him. Several other prominent citizens of the county testified that it was their opinion that, if the accused were tried in Miller county and escaped a death sentence, he would be lynched. A great many other prominent citizens of the county testified to the contrary, stating that in their opinion the accused could get a fair trial in the county, and that, even if acquitted, he would be in no danger of mob violence. The court overruled the motion, and the accused excepted.

While the evidence was in sharp conflict as to whether the accused, if he escaped a death sentence upon his trial, would be lynched, we think that, under all the facts of the case, it was sufficient to reasonably show that under such circumstances he would be in danger of being lynched, or of having other violence done to him. It follows that the court erred in overruling the motion. See in this connection Ga. L. 1911, p. 74 (6 Park's Ann. Code, § 964); Kennedy v. State, 141 Ga. 314, 80 S. E. 1012; Bivins v. State, 145 Ga. 416, 89 S. E. 370; Marshall v. State, 20 Ga. App. 416, 93 S. E. 98; Butler v. State, 26 Ga. App. 435, 106 S. E. 744.

PAYNE, Agent, v. WELLS. (No. 12730.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Dec. 15, 1921.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. Railroads —346(2), 351(2)—Presumption of negligence defined and applied.

The general rule, that it is error for the trial judge to state to the jury an allegation of negligence contained in the plaintiff's petition, where the allegation is not sustained by any evidence, does not apply in an action for damages against a railroad company for a homicide, where the evidence shows that the homicide was caused by the running of the defendant's cars, for in such a case the presumption arises that the defendant was negligent in each and every particular as alleged in the plaintiff's declaration, and primarily this presumption is sufficient to prove the negligence alleged. In such a case it is not error for the court, in charging the jury, to refer to all the acts of negligence alleged, although the allegations as to some of them may not be sustained by any evidence, and may even be disproved by undisputed evidence. See, in this connection, Georgia Railway & Electric Co. v. Bailey, 9 Ga. App. 106(6, 7), 70 S. E. 607. Under this ruling there is no merit in grounds 1 to 9 (inclusive) of the amendment to the motion for a new trial.

2. Railroads —351(3)—Charge on presumption of negligence held correct.

Complaint is made of the following charge: "This presumption of negligence arising from this Code section (2780) which I have read to you is not a conclusive presumption. It simply puts the burden upon the defendant of showing that its agents and employees were in the exercise of all ordinary care and diligence in and about the transaction which the plaintiff claims brought about her husband's death." (Italics ours.) It was contended that the court erred in using the words "in and about the transaction," because the burden that the law placed upon the defendant was merely that of disproving the negligence actually charged in the plaintiff's petition. This charge was substantially correct, and it does not appear that it could have misled the jury or injured the plaintiff. See, in this connection, Jackson v. Georgia Railroad & Banking Co., 7 Ga. App. 644(1), 67 S. E. 898, and Georgia Southern, etc., Ry. Co. v. Thornton, 144 Ga. 481(2), 87 S. E. 388. This is especially true when this portion of the charge is considered in the light of the entire charge.

3. Trial —235(5) — Charge comparing evidence of witnesses, "other things being equal," held not erroneous.

Exception is taken to the following excerpt from the charge of the court: "On that subject I charge you that the existence of a fact testified to by one positive witness is to be believed rather than that such fact did not exist, because many witnesses who had the same opportunity of observation swear that they did not know or see of its having transpired, provided other things are equal, and the witnesses are of equal credibility." It is insisted by the movant that the words "provided other things are equal," as used in this excerpt from the charge, were error. There is no merit in this exception. Substantially the same charge, including the words objected to, was approved by this court in Benton v. State, 3 Ga. App. 453, 455, 60 S. E. 116.

4. Requested instructions properly refused.

Under the facts of the case, the court did not err in refusing the request to charge as set forth in the twelfth special ground of the motion for a new trial.

5. Ground for new trial without merit.

There is no substantial merit in either the fourteenth or the fifteenth special grounds of the motion for a new trial.

6. Negligence —93(1)—Railroads —324(3) —Violation by motorist of speed regulation held not to preclude recovery for negligence; automobile driver's negligence not imputable to guest.

The thirteenth special ground of the motion for a new trial is merely an amplification of the general grounds of the motion. The verdict was authorized by the evidence. This was a suit for damages against a railroad company for the homicide of the plaintiff's husband. The homicide occurred at a public railroad crossing when a moving train of the defendant struck an automobile in which the plaintiff's husband and three other men were riding. While the evidence showed that the automobile approached the crossing at a speed greater than six miles per hour, which was a violation of the law (Ga. Laws 1910, p. 90), this would not necessarily preclude a recovery of damages for negligence of the employees of the defendant operating the train, even by the driver of the automobile (Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Larsen, 19 Ga. App. 413, 91 S. E. 517; Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Moore, 149 Ga. 531, 101 S. E. 668), and certainly, under the facts of the case, would not prevent a recovery by the plaintiff. In the instant case any negligence of the driver of the automobile could not be imputed to the plaintiff's husband, for it was shown upon the trial that the husband was not the driver or owner of the automobile, but was riding therein as an invited guest, and the evidence did not demand a finding that he and the driver of the automobile were at the time engaged in a joint enterprise. Nor did the evidence demand a finding that the plaintiff's husband, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have avoided the homicide. Nor did the evidence demand a finding that the homicide was occasioned solely by the negligence of the driver of the automobile. On the other hand, the evidence authorized a finding that the defendant's employees operating the train were guilty of at least one of the acts of negligence charged, to wit, failing to blow the whistle, or to ring the bell, or to check the speed of the train, at the crossing where the catastrophe occurred, and that this negligence was concurrent with the negligence of the driver of the automobile, and contributed to the homicide. See, in this connection, Seaboard Air-Line Railway v. Barrow, 18 Ga. App. 261(5), 89 S. E. 333.

7. Denial of new trial proper.

The court did not err, for any reason assigned, in overruling the motion for a new trial.

CLARK v. STATE. (No. 12966.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1
Dec. 14, 1921.)

1. Criminal law §1064(4)—Ground of new trial requiring examination of evidence to determine whether rejection of testimony proper cannot be considered.

The ground of the motion for a new trial, which complains of the repelling of certain testimony offered by the movant, cannot be considered, as it is defective, for the reason that it would require this court to examine the brief of evidence to determine whether the evidence rejected was material.

2. Criminal law §730(1)—Remarks of solicitor held not ground for new trial in view of instructions to disregard.

A ground of the motion for a new trial complains of the action of the court in permitting the prosecuting attorney to make certain alleged improper remarks in his argument to the jury. While the ground states that on account of such remarks a motion for a mistrial was made and overruled, error is not assigned upon the judgment overruling the motion, but the only error assigned in the ground is upon the action of the court "in permitting the solicitor of the city court of Greenville to make" the alleged improper remarks. Moreover, the note of the trial judge shows that he in effect rebuked the solicitor for making the improper remarks, and specifically instructed the jury not to consider them in making up their verdict. In view of these facts there is no merit in this ground.

3. Criminal law §1172(7)—Instructions prejudicial to state, and not to defendant, not ground for reversal.

Exception is taken to the following excerpt from the charge of the court: "If it has been shown to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt that Albert Clark, the defendant here on trial, sold corn whisky in this county as alleged in the indictment, then the defendant would be guilty, and the burden would then be on him to show you that he is not guilty." In the sentence quoted the last clause, to wit, "and the burden would then be on him to show you that he is not guilty," was erroneous and should have been omitted, but the error was prejudicial to the state, and not to the defendant. The excerpt was not erroneous for any reason assigned.

4. Criminal law §815(11)—Instruction as to reasonable doubt held not erroneous as excluding consideration of defendant's statement.

In defining a reasonable doubt the court charged that it was the doubt of a reasonable man, a doubt "that grows out of the evidence, or want of evidence, or circumstances of the case." This charge was not subject to the exception that it excluded from the jury any consideration of the defendant's statement, in their passing upon the question of a reasonable doubt, the court having properly instructed the jury as to the weight which might be given to the defendant's statement. Harris v. State, 136 Ga. 107(3), 70 S. E. 952; Sheffield v. State, 15 Ga. App. 514(2), 83 S. E. 871, and citations.

5. Criminal law §1160—Verdict approved by trial court will not be interfered with on appeal.

The verdict was authorized by the evidence, and, having been approved by the trial judge, this court is without authority to interfere with it.
